Artwork expressed through teaching

By Michelle Kubik

Ted Blenderman is a man of many talents and he has found that teaching is the best way to express them.

Blenderman, an art, speech and drama instructor, has taught in the Wayne school system for 14 years.

"Fortunately, my occupation and outside interests are the same," Blenderman said. "Although they aren't that lucky." "Most people don't have that luck," he has found teaching the most interesting and rewarding of his talents.

"IT'S EASY TO GET frustrated with the drastic changes in students' attitudes," he said. "On the other hand, I get frustrated when a student has so much talent that you have to make a choice of where to direct it."

Blenderman said that he also has problems "keeping up" with the changes in education.

"If you get behind," he said, "you're out of it."

Blenderman, a former student at the Minneapolis Institute of Art, the University of Nevada at Las Vegas and a graduate of Wayne State College, is part of a new fine arts camp to be held in Wayne, June 18-22.

THE FUN CAMP, which stands for Fine Arts and Unique experiences in Northeast Nebraska, is devoted to better meet the creative needs of students.

Coordinated by Wayne Middle School teacher, Cyndi Swartz, the camp will offer courses in problem solving, music, creative movement, theater, creative writing, visual arts and Ameslan (American Sign Language).

Blenderman will be in charge of the drama portion of the camp's activities.

"In order to involve a student in acting," he said, "you need to teach them poise, self expression and most importantly, self confidence."

BLENDERMAN ALSO WROTE an original melodrama, with the four-day camp in mind.

A melodrama has a predictable plot, with actors portraying stereotyped characters," he said.

"Double Trouble At Sweetheart Boarding House - Cry Me Some Tears" has twelve main speaking parts, but will be performed by all students at the camp.

"The plot is based on boarders needing to pay the mortgage," he said. "When they learn there is gold hidden in the house, they search for clues to help them find the treasure."

BLENDERMAN SAID ALL aspects of the camp will be worked into the melodrama.

"Clues will be given in the cast's dances and songs, and through artwork done at the camp," he said. "Puzzle solving, is a creative art in itself."

AIR-BRUSH PAINTING is one of Ted Blenderman's latest interests in the fine arts. He has also written an original melodrama for the FUN camp taking place at Wayne State College, June 18-22.

has been successful, considering that it's a new idea.

"Emphasis used to be totally on athletics," he said. "Kids were afraid of the arts and the risk of being in the spotlight for open criticism."

HE SAID THAT students are sharper, smarter and more creative than ever before. Education is also better, with more things being available to the student, he added.

"The greatest reward for any teacher is to watch a student excel," he said. "It's a good feeling to know that you had a tiny part in making something happen for them."

Blenderman, who does artwork at home, is currently working with air-brush painting. He hopes to have his own art show some day, displaying some of his work.

As a writer of five plays, seeing something in print is another of his personal goals.

Tuition increase passed

An increase in non-resident tuition at the high school level and salary negotiations were among the items discussed when members of the Wayne-Carroll Board of Education met for their regular meeting on Tuesday, June 12.

The board gave unanimous approval to an increase in non-resident high school tuition for the coming 1984-85 school year, raising the sum from $6,300 to $7,300 per student.

Dr. Francis Haun, superintendent of the schools, reported that the number of tuition students is expected to decrease in the coming year from approximately 56 to 48 students.

He also added that this will be the last

Park policy is questioned

Wayne's Park and Recreation Department, staffed mostly by volunteers, is being questioned by the Nebraska Advocacy Service on an issue concerning a Wayne child with Down's syndrome who was denied participation in the city's park and recreation program.

Kem Swartz, Wayne city attorney, told the city council members Tuesday evening he received a telephone call Tuesday afternoon from Tim Shaw of the Nebraska Advocacy Service in Lincoln.

The call to Shaw, he said, came from a Wayne parent. Shaw said the child was taken to register for the city's park and recreation program. However, the parents were informed that the park and recreation department did not have the qualified staff nor the facilities to provide activities for the individual, Swartz told the council.

Since most of the park and recreation department staff is volunteer or Wayne there were no staff members specifically trained to handle this type of situation.

To assure clearing liability for the city of Wayne, one alternative would be to hire a salaried individual qualified to assist the park and recreation department in extending the program to children with Down's syndrome or other handicaps, he mentioned.

The city, because of economic factors, "might" be faced with possible termination of the park and recreation program if the above alternative is required, he added.

The city council took no action Tuesday night on the verbal communication from Shaw.

In a telephone conversation Wednesday morning, Shaw said the identification of the parents and family calling in the complaint is confidential.

The parents informed him that someone had been secured to go with the child to the activities in the parks and recreation program, but still the individual was turned down, Shaw said.

"We're going to continue looking into this. It is important to raise the conscience of the community. We want to see if it is at all possible to get the child into the activity," Shaw said.

"The really important thing in dealing with kids with disabilities is that we can't be afraid," Shaw said.

He said all children, including those with disabilities, would enjoy and benefit from the interaction of activities in the parks and recreation program.

"It helps the individuals appreciate the life and uniqueness of every individual," Shaw mentioned.

Beutler proposes code of ethics

viewpoint

Punch against assault

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association.

The recent approval of a plan to pay state lawmakers for their expenses during legislative sessions has prompted a call for a code of ethics which would end the practice of lobbyists buying meals and drinks for senators.

Sen. Chris Beutler of Lincoln has presented his proposed code to the Legislative Council Executive Board for consideration.

Because taxpayers will be paying a per diem allowance to lawmakers to cover their expenses, Beutler said, it makes no sense to continue the practice of lobbyists buying meals, drinks and entertainment for senators.

Beutler said an ethics code would curb public criticism of the expense policy, which provides senators with income beyond their $4,800 annual salary.

"We're taking it on the ear about expenses; we're taking it on the ear about Commonwealth," Beutler told the executive board.

"We have fully dined in the halls of the lobbyists and have done it with a certain amount of self-justification because we had to pay expenses out of our own pocket," Beutler said, but the time of the free lunch should be over.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD of the Legislative Council approved an expense plan for state senators that will cost $240,000 for next year's 90-day session. In addition, the state will have to pay about $475,000 to current and former senators for expenses incurred during the last two years while the issue was being litigated.

The plan was recommended by a legislative subcommittee appointed after the Nebraska Supreme Court ruled that a 1981 law on expenses was constitutional. The law, sponsored by Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha, allows senators to be reimbursed for necessary expenses incurred during legislative sessions.

Until now, senators have been reimbursed only for one round trip between their homes and the Capitol during each legislative session. During the interims, they have been reimbursed for actual expenses associated with their official duties.

Under the plan, senators who live more than 50 miles from the Capitol will receive a daily expense allowance of $55, plus reimbursement at 21 cents per mile for one round trip per week between their homes and the Capitol.

THOSE WHO LIVE closer to the Capitol will receive a per diem of $25 plus actual daily mileage.

The per diem amounts equal the federal expense allowance for legislators and will change as the federal policy changes. Regardless of whether they are present, senators will receive the payments for each day of the session.

Beutler's proposal for a prohibition on lobbyists picking up the tab has won favor with Sen. Vard Johnson of Omaha, chairman of the executive board.

"Once legislators receive expense allowances, it seems that the better practice is for legislators to pay their own way," he said. Although he personally supports the idea, he said, he would not be surprised if the board hesitates when it is brought up for consideration.

"I think it'll be approached cautiously," he said, primarily because "we are all victims of long-standing habits (and) accepting entertainment by lobbyists is a habit of at least 50 years' standing."

Beutler's code also would prohibit senators from hiring their relatives for paid positions in the Legislature and would prevent a senator from becoming a lobbyist for one year after he or she leaves office. Johnson said the board will consider those suggestions while it works on a personnel plan this year.

Missing a birdie putt on the golf course can be shrugged off. Spoiling a batch of cookies is nothing serious. Minor fender benders can be looked on as unavoidable. Forgetting a one-liner in the school play can be considered good experience.

So what identity do people place on a situation involving a 10-year-old girl who is assaulted by a friend, stranger or parent?

The answer: A tragedy that should not be tossed aside and forgotten. It happens everywhere — big cities and smaller communities — where cases go unreported about young children under 15 years of age being physically or mentally abused.

Even if the crime is solved and proper punishment is handed down to the lawbreaker, repercussions of the crime will continually haunt victims.

There seems to be no quiet, quick escape from the deep emotional scars of the assault incidents.

Unfortunately, physical and mental abuse of young children won't go away if we close our eyes. And young children certainly can't be kept indoors with their parents 24 hours a day.

But parents should be informed of the various precautions and ideas which would aid in curbing the growing number of child physical or mental abuse cases.

One of these programs, entitled "Cat and Mouse" was explained by Jill Perry to the Wayne Kiwanis Club last week. It's a plan developed in 1979 by the Girls Club of Omaha to teach children between ages six to 13 several methods of self-protection against physical and mental abuse.

Since its birth, the "Cat and Mouse" eight-hour program participation has mushroomed significantly. Up to 100 children registered for the program when it began. Eight thousand youths will participate in the program this year.

Wayne's boy scout and girl scout organizations would probably assist in starting a pilot "Cat and Mouse" program here — seeking names of interested parents or participants, according to Perry.

The program will teach children to identify potentially dangerous situations and how to avoid them; allow the children to practice self-protection skills; assist the child in becoming familiar with those in the community who can help; permit the child to examine his/her relationship with adults; and help the individual develop personal decision-making skills.

A common cost to participate in the "Cat and Mouse" program is $12 per individual. However, Kate Emanuel of the "Cat and Mouse" head office in Omaha said the fee should not discourage anyone from attending the program.

Other sources of funding could be derived from foundations, corporations, businesses or service clubs throughout the program area, Emanuel said.

The "Cat and Mouse" program is one investment which should be seriously considered by the Wayne community.

Some might say Wayne isn't like those cities of over 100,000 people which repeatedly have case-loads of reports on child physical or mental abuse. However, Emanuel points out that, even if situations of abuse may vary in a smaller community, the problem is there no matter what the population.

Physical or mental abuse could happen during the school year, or at a grocery store or a place where the young children gather.

Or it can come over the telephone, as is indicated in a letter sent to the editor published below.

Supporting a program such as "Cat and Mouse" might not be a solution in stopping physical and mental child abuse.

But it should ease the minds of parents who know their children have the knowledge and certain skills to protect themselves from abuse should the situation arise.

Budget deficit threatens recovery

Congressman Doug Bereuter called on the House leadership this week to bring to the floor of the House of Representatives a constitutional amendment limiting federal spending.

"We cannot be confident of economic growth and prosperity until the malaise caused by exorbitant taxes and counterproductive tax policies, unrestrained federal spending, and dangerously high federal demand upon the credit market is eliminated," Bereuter said.

"We cannot make these problems go away by ignoring them. It is time for this House and the Congress to address the issue honestly and forthrightly."

Bereuter noted the improvements in the nation's economy. "We have made remarkable progress in economic recovery in the last three years. Inflation is down; unemployment is down; interest rates are down, although not far enough. Yet, we are confronted by a menace that threatens the fiscal stability of the government and the economic well-being of every family in the nation," he said.

"The danger that we face, the massive projected $180 billion federal budget deficit, threatens to undermine our recovery," the First District Congressman said. "More than 20 years of uncontrolled federal spending must be halted, and fiscal discipline must be restored to our nation."

Bereuter said, "Adoption of a spending limitation amendment would not be a panacea for fiscal folly, but it would be an important step in the battle against destructive economic forces."

"It is time for the leadership of this House to permit debate on a constitutional amendment to limit federal spending. The Congress should be leading in this battle, and it is not," Bereuter said.

The Congressman pointed out in the last five years, 32 states have passed petitions calling for a constitutional convention to pass a balanced budget amendment. "If we do not act on the issue of a spending limit, we will soon find that the states have forced a constitutional convention," he said.

"It is time for the Congress to assume its responsibility," Bereuter said. "Moving realistically towards a balanced budget through a constitutional limit on spending is necessary."

Something to cluck about

To the editor:
To Wayne's "Wing Ding" Chicken days July 13-14

Some people talk "turkey" but anyone for turkey talk? Since Wayne has the chicken fever and its worth crowing about, I thought I'd be a good egg and write to provide coverage on Chicken Show Days and maybe hatch an idea or two, to egg you on.

When a hen lays an egg, she spreads the news by cackling loud and clear for all to hear. Maybe it pays to advertise because chicken eggs make the best sale. So why not cackle about Wayne's Chicken Days, as they are near.

Though, I may be called an egghead with all this cackling but there's nothing as "egg-citing" as the art and craft show, with all its fine feather slicers, pin feathers and ruffled feathers. It's got to be the time to stop and pick at this peak time. So lets comb all the cobwebs out of our hair and wattle up to the counter and buy something to feather our nests.

Chicken shows may not be all cracked-up to what some think they should be. Shell we then gather all our good eggs in a basket and "puff" and "try" to save the golden birds that are coming to Wayne? Chicken picking can be pin feathers to our likes and dislikes. Smile anyway, you could be on Chicken Camera! Just hope we don't molt like a chicken and lose all our fine feathers.

Though most of us get the neck of the chicken and are not the pick of the crop we can still have fun and beat the drumsticks hard to the beat of the wooden drums to the tune of "Chicken in the Straw." It takes lots of guts and back bone to do chicken antics. So if we flutter our wings down to the chicken show with our brood, we may have to pick and skin our way through the crowd and have a wish bone or two in hand, to win those contests and games.

But the real joy may come when we are stuffing our faces with those delicious omelets and the extras that go with it. Thanks to those baskets full of good eggs that produces this tasty occasion.

But when its all summed up we are a nest of good eggs, gathered together for a good time. And when the day is done we'll head for our nests to roost and get up early the next morning with the chickens. Then crow or cackle about the good time we had at Wayne's Chicken Days.

It is said, never to put all your eggs in one basket and don't count your chickens before they are hatched. But we can start the day with our sunny side up and be a part of that number by gathering or participating in the big parade even though we may get baked, broiled, or become like fryers in the hot sun.

As the turkey today is a part of native America art form, let's give the chicken its place, too, here in Wayne, Nebraska.

Hope you like my cornish chicken talk and may this chicken walk with you to the Big Chicken Days this year.

Obscene caller

To the editor:
Well, it's that time of year again. The flowers are blooming, the lawns are nice and green. Spring is in the air! Moms and dads are busy at their jobs, kids are out of school — and the obscene and annoyance calls are happening all over again.

It started up last year about this time. Some boy started calling my 11-year-old daughter saying all kinds of horrible things to her. It seems that when school ends the phone calls start.

School has been out 3 weeks now and the problem is here again.

We think we know who he is. If he calls again — we'll know. The phone company is putting a device on our line that keeps track of all calls coming in. When we do catch him, we'll prosecute!

So please, talk to your kids. Warn them that the telephone is not a toy. It may be your kid that gets caught — or gets the next phone call.

A very angry mom
P.S. If he calls again he'll also get a very loud surprise. I bought a whistle.

Long may I wave

I am in a soldier's hand, waving with the wind. Proudly my colors shine as I lead the big parade. The blasts of trumpets follow me, followed by screeching sirens and tractors pulling beautiful floats, gorging queens.

Then my joy turns to sorrow, pride to humility, patience to sincere frustration as we pass by the spectators. People are avoiding me. They shun me away. The machinery gets more attention than I do.

The soldier does not notice. He must concentrate on his steps while the band behind continues to play. If only I could yell at them, tell them I'm embarrassed. It isn't that difficult to give me attention or show a simple salute.

Then I caught sight of an elderly man removing his hat, placing his hand over his heart — and staring. A young boy standing near him asked, "Grandfather, why did you do that?"

"Because I am a true patriotic American and respectful of the Flag and what it stands for," I heard the old man say. "For each thread on that Flag has special meaning and I cherish it very strongly with every beat of my heart."

THE FLAG LED our World War I battle troops, as it did, the first continental army who gave Americans freedom. It keeps coming to mind how, when we conquered a hill, the American Flag stood tall before us, showing might and splendor.

But the Flag also signified sadness and solitude, draped over the coffin of an unknown soldier while trumpets played laments. We fly our Flag at half-mast knowing that a national hero has given his life for his country.

When the children stand in the ball park and sing, I stand in the game with a rousing National Anthem. Our Flag represents competition, as it also brings tears to American athletes who receive an Olympic gold medal.

Our Flag represents education, needed tremendously if our nation is to bring, inventive and industrious. Our school flies the Flag every school day, on the grounds symbolizing our country's devotion towards educating you and others to be future leaders.

It makes me wish so bad when I see a torn and tattered Flag, or one left to rot in heavy rains.

Our Flag is different from flags of other countries and that's because we want to be a separate nation.

THE YOUNG BOY stood proudly to his grandfather, and then reached out to me just like the old man did. I understand this strong feeling you have, grandfather. It's a pity not everyone understands like you," the boy said.

Hearing this made me feel the American Flag once again proud of the people I serve. My stars brightened, representing each state which toiled to get its start. If there are future problems we Americans really want to be there.

The above was written several years ago by Chuck Hackenmiller, who at the time was employed by the Monitor-Review, Stacyville, Iowa. It was rewritten to be a tribute to Flag Day, which is Thursday, June 14.

REECE URGES campers to do their best on and off the field during Monday night's speech at the WSC Student Center.

"REMEMBER WHAT you learn while you're here," was the advice given by Beasley Reece during one of the camp's outdoor practice sessions.

THE BALL bounces off the fingertips of Wayne's Darren Barner as Pete Warne provides pass coverage.

'Learning the basics' part of '84 WSC football camp

"The youth are building the foundation of their life now. If that foundation is strong, life will be easy."

This was one of the thoughts expressed by Tampa Bay Buccaneer Beasley Reece during part of an informal speech given on Monday night at the Wayne State College Student Center.

The speech was a part of the first annual Wayne State College Football Camp, which began on Sunday.

Reece, a free safety for the Buccaneers, kept those gathered entertained as he related stories of his high school, college and professional career in football, along with giving his insights on his personal goals and values.

"One man with the belief and confidence can make a difference, he can always make a difference," Reece told the campers after relating a story about a late fourth quarter Tampa Bay win over the Pittsburgh Steelers.

The son of a school principal and an elementary school teacher from Waco, Tex., Reece had always done well in school, but he pointed out that doing well was done as much or more for himself than his parents.

"You can find 'average' or 'C' level thinking anywhere, on any street corner, any town...there's nothing wrong with that thinking if it's the best that can be," Reece stated. "But accepting that kind of thinking will get you in trouble, both in the classroom and on the field," he added.

HE TOLD that "people who enjoy life are willing to try, to give that extra effort," and that attitude and the extra effort are keys to success.

"If you want to be good, be good for yourself," he said. "When the coach would tell us to run three laps after practice, I would run four," Reece said. "Those first three laps were for the coach, but that last lap was for me."

The same attitude applies in the classroom, according to Reece, doing just a little more reading or homework than has been assigned.

He ended the speech with a challenge to the younger players, asking them to "challenge themselves, and make their dreams happen."

"Be happy now. Everything that you need God has already given to you, you need nothing else to succeed," he said.

During a question and answer session, Reece explained the unique situation that brought him into the college and professional football ranks.

After having little football playing experience in high school, Reece attended North Texas State with no real intention to play football.

His assigned roommate happened to be a trainer on the school's football team, and "informed" Reece that he was just as good or better than those currently on the team.

Reece then compared himself to those players and as a sophomore won a full ride scholarship through the football program and was a starter for three years.

He was drafted by the Dallas Cowboys following completion of college, and played with New York before being signed by Tampa Bay.

THERE WERE 37 youths attending the football camp, including 12 from Wayne, four from Harlan, Iowa and four from Lawton, Iowa and other Iowa and Nebraska communities.

The purpose of the three-day camp, which ended Wednesday, was to teach each player individual skills and fundamentals.

Winston Hill, also of the New York Jets, appeared at the football camp Sunday and Monday and offered valuable fundamental tips.

Sunday evening featured a talk by Winston Hill and pro football highlight films. On Monday morning, the camp participants drilled inside but decided to practice outside in the rain during the afternoon hours.

On Tuesday, all football camp sessions were conducted outdoors as scheduled.

GROUP CALISTHENICS on the practice field are all a part of the daily football camp routine.

Wayne County part of state conservation tillage plan

Wayne County is participating in an intensive five year education program in conservation tillage.

New equipment, better herbicides plus the increased realization that soil and energy conservation are very important has fueled new interests in conservation tillage programs, according to Don Spitze, Wayne County Extension Agent-Chairman.

Governor Kerrey announced last summer the beginning of a five year program aimed at increasing conservation tillage 20 percent and no-till 10 percent — in addition to decreasing fuel use in the targeted counties.

The project is being operated by the Cooperative Extension of the University of Nebraska. Paul Jasa, extension agriculture engineer, will be devoting two-thirds of his time in Wayne County to assist in conducting the program.

SPITZE SAID Wayne County was targeted as one of seven counties in the state who are participating in the conservation tillage program. One part of this effort is the planting of test plots through Wayne County.

He said a survey was taken of a particular township in Wayne County which was lacking in conservation tillage practices.

"None were using a no-till planter," Spitze said.

There are two major reasons why conservation tillage in Wayne County is considered so important, Spitze said.

"The first reason is that conservation tillage will cut costs. It will reduce the number of trips across the field," he mentioned.

He said conservation tillage will require use of smaller tractors since there is no plowing involved.

The second reason, he said, was "to conserve the soil."

"Wayne County is in an area where soil erosion is extremely high and conservation is being practiced at a minimum," Spitze said.

"We can document that there is very little conservation tillage in Wayne County, he added.

NINE PLOTS within the county have been planted using no-till planters.

Those with the no-till plots include:

- Dale Stoltenberg — Plot 3, located one mile north of Carroll on road going west on south side of road, showing a 10 acre field of corn planted in soybean residue.
- Plot 2, located 1 1/2 miles north of Carroll and about 1/4 mile east, showing a 10 acre field of corn planted into soybean residue and center pivot irrigated.
- Plot 1, three miles north of Carroll, west side of road in northeast corner of section, showing a 10 acre field of corn planted in corn residue.
- Larry Bauer — Plot 4, three miles west of Winside, one mile south and 1/4 mile west on north side of road, showing 10 acres of corn planted into soybean residue.
- Melvin Meierhenry — Plot 4, five miles west of Winside, 1/2 mile north on east side of road, showing 10 acres of corn into two year old sweet clover stubble.
- Plot 5, showing 10 acres of corn into silage corn stubble.
- Stan Baier — Plot 7, located four miles south of Wayne and 3/4 mile east on south side of road, showing five acres of corn into soybean residue.
- Plot 8, located same as Plot 7, showing five acres soybeans into corn residue.
- And Erwin Haggeman — Plot 9, five miles south of Wayne, 1 3/4 miles east on north side of road, showing 10 acres beans into corn residue.

All of the above plots were planted as no till with herbicide applied either pre or post emergence. The same fertilizer, seed and plant population was applied as the individual farmer normally uses on his own fields, according to Spitze.

"These plots will demonstrate not only how conservation tillage can reduce erosion, but how fuel, labor and time are saved due to fewer trips over the field," he said.

"I encourage people to inspect these plots throughout the season. Be looking for the announcement of our tours which will be scheduled early in July," he added.

Certified employees get pay hike

ESU board approves master contract

Following several months of negotiations, members of the board of directors of Educational Service Unit One have voted to adopt a two-year master contract agreement for the 1983-84 and 1984-85 school years for the unit's 46 certified employees.

The unanimous approval came Tuesday night during the board's regular monthly meeting at ESU 1 headquarters in Wakefield.

Terms of the contract, which has also been ratified by representatives of the ESU Education Association, sets the base salary for 1983-84 at $12,450, a 4.6 percent increase over the $11,900 base set during 1982-83.

Deryl Lawrence of Wayne, chairman of the board's negotiating team, said employees of the unit will receive retroactive pay for 1983-84 based on the $12,450 base.

THE CONTRACT as approved by the board and ESU Education Association sets the 1984-85 base salary at $13,300 — a 6.8 percent increase over the $12,450 base in 1983-84 and, an 11.8 percent increase from the $11,900 base set during 1982-83.

Lawrence said the increase in base salaries averages 5.9 percent per year.

The new contract, according to Lawrence, also includes some expansion of the salary schedule. He said two educational columns are added to cover specialist certification and employees with doctoral degrees.

The contract retains Blue Cross Blue Shield for major medical insurance. Disability insurance also was continued.

Lawrence said leave policies have also been specified and clarified, including leave for sickness, emergencies, civil and personal matters.

Lawrence pointed out that the new contract is public record and may be viewed at the ESU 1 office in Wakefield.

Serving as chairman of the negotiating team for the ESU Education Association was Kimberly Cavillo of Randolph.

NO OTHER action was taken during Tuesday night's meeting.

ESU 1 Administrator Harry Mills asked board members to "review" the unit's insurance programs (including liability, disability, property, etc.) and contact him if they have any questions.

Mills also reported that a tentative budget for 1984-85, along with a report on next year's school contracts for special education, will be mailed to board members at a later date.

Mills said special education contracts for next year total approximately $1,266,000.

THE BOARD briefly discussed the possibility of Dakota County contracting with ESU 1 for the services and duties of a county superintendent.

Mills said he recently was contacted by a Dakota County Commissioner regarding the contract.

Mills added that at the present time four service units in Nebraska provide this service through a contract with county commissioners.

Board President Claire Hansen asked Mills to gather information from the four other units now providing the service and report back to the board.

Next meeting of ESU 1 board of directors is scheduled July 10.

year that schools will be allowed to set their own tuition rates.

Starting next year, Haun said that the state of Nebraska will determine both a minimum and maximum amount that may be charged to non-residents and schools will then charge rates which fall between those guidelines.

Various salary increases were also brought to the board for approval. A motion which gave a 20 cent an hour increase to all hourly wage earners was recognized as having been passed at a prior meeting.

THE BOARD passed a motion which gave a 4.8 percent increase on base annual salary to personnel who do not negotiate their wages — including the school superintendent, high school, middle school and elementary school principals, superintendent of buildings and grounds, secretary of the board of education and the head cook.

Increases of $50 were also allowed in the area of professional dues to the superintendent and school principals and an amount of $200 was established for dues in the area of special education. The salaries of special education and Chapter 1 directors were also raised $200.

The board went into executive session to discuss teacher salary negotiations, but no action was taken.

In old business, the board gave their final approval on the written notice to bidders on the middle and elementary school roofing projects. The approved notice will be published and contractors will contact the school's architectural firm for further details.

Bids will be accepted no later than 2 p.m. on Tuesday, July 10, at which time the board will meet to make a decision.

that time asbestos is found in any of the questioned areas, the board gave Dr. Haun approval to take steps necessary to have it removed.

Contracts with the Educational Service Unit for services through the 1984-85 school year were approved as presented. An increase from $38,700 in 1983-84 to $48,044 in 84-85 prompted the school board to consider hiring a speech therapist for the Wayne School system itself in the following school year.

The Wayne-Carroll faculty and staff was completed with the board's approval of Jim Murtaugh as the new social science instructor. A cum laude graduate of Dana College in Blair, Murtaugh will also work with the middle school wrestling program. He is a native of Harlan, Iowa.

The board also received a letter from Dale and Karen Johnson of Wayne requesting permission for their daughter to attend kindergarten in the upcoming school year. In return, the Johnsons will file a free holders petition on their six and one-half acres of land south of Wayne at the earliest possible date.

IN OTHER school board business:

- Dr. Haun reported to the board with a follow-up on the graduating class of 1984. Over 70 percent of the class is enrolled in a two- or four-year college or leaning institutions while 10 percent enlisted in the armed services.
- A report compiled by high school Principal Don Zeiss was presented to outline the professional growth and in-service activities which the staff and faculty were involved in during the 1983-84 school year.
- Information on the teachers workshop planned for August 27-29 was presented for the purpose of informing board members of events planned.
- Approval was given to the proposed Otte subdivision.
- Impact of the proposed tax petitions was discussed.
- And the 1984-85 school year budget was discussed, preliminary budget will be presented at July meeting.
- The next regular meeting of the school board has been set for 8 p.m., July 10.

Alleys get repaired, then ruined

Just when Wayne's street crews were catching up repairing the city's alleys, heavy trucks traveled on the alleys and tore them up.

Vern Schulz, head of the street department, expressed frustration about four recent happenings that took place during the past week concerning four alleys located within the city of Wayne.

The four alleys, located between Lincoln Street-Douglas Street and 11th Street-12th Street, had been filled in by the city crews with material obtained from a railroad right-of-way and topped with crushed rock.

Days later, Schulz said heavy trucks went down the alleys and ruined the entire project.

"When it dries up, we're going to have to re-bleed the alley. The rock on it now will end up in the tracks (made from the heavy trucks)," Schulz said.

He said the problem with the alleys stems back to last fall when the snows came in November before the ground had frozen. Later this spring, Schulz placed an article in the Wayne Herald, encouraging the people to gather a petition requesting repair work on the resident's neighboring alley.

"We had many people come in with petitions," he said. "Ninety percent of the petitions requested crushed rock."

It costs approximately $350 to $400 to repair the average 300 foot alleys in the city of Wayne, he said. Equipment used in repairing and hauling material, plus the material itself contribute to the cost of the alley repair.

The most costly of the expenditures is the purchase of crushed rock — averaging approximately $202.50 for the average alley.

Of this total, $101.25 is paid by the property owners along the road while the balance is picked up by the city, according to Schulz.

The city and the property owner both suffer losses on the investment of alley repair. If the alley is immediately ruined, he pointed out.

HE SUGGESTED the city establish an ordinance which would outlaw any heavy vehicles to drive through the alleys following a rain. He also recommended the city council consider an ordinance to place garbage on street curbs to alleviate garbage truck traffic in the alleys.

Vern Russell of Wayne's Refuse Service said that in the "older sections of town that have alleys, 75 percent of the garbage is picked up in the alleys."

He said he drove his garbage truck through one of the alleys not knowing it had been recently covered with railroad bed fill and crushed rock. He got on the alley but decided not to back out for fear he'd work up the alley even more, he said.

Picking up garbage in the alleys is ideal, he said, because the hauler can pick up refuse from two streets at one time. However, he said he would not object to getting people to place their garbage on street curbs.

"I just don't want to catch static for it," Russell said.

Councilman Freeman Decker motioned to place the curb garbage issue on the agenda for a future meeting.

Russell also discussed with the city council the situation of the road leading to D & J Hatchery, which is a portion of Fairgrounds Avenue. He said the road was graded firm and ready for gravel, but the city council had delayed the project in favor of graveling the alleys.

Feed trucks come to the hatchery three times a week as do other heavy trucks and track the mud onto the hatchery's parking lot, he said.

PRESENTLY, traffic on the road is complicated by work on the city's waste water treatment plant currently under construction.

"Once they get done there (with the sewage treatment plant project), we want to rock the road. Graveling is only a temporary stop (of muddy road conditions)," Russell said.

Mayor Wayne Marsh said the road repair is being complicated by the uncooperating weather. Also on Tuesday evening, the city council:

- Received a request from Schulz to consider purchasing or lease purchasing a grader, which would be used in the city's alleys and will be a back-up to the larger grader the city uses.
- Currently the city has a 1948 grader which has been durable over the past years, but has broken down three times this spring, Schulz said.
- An estimated cost on the grader Schulz was looking at (from a company in Sioux City) would be over $20,000 if purchased outright or beyond $15,000 if the unit is purchased with trade-in.
- The machine, Schulz said, is little but is "capable of handling a four to six inch snowfall."
- City council members authorized Schulz and the city administrator to "negotiate a lease-purchase arrangement for bottom dollar or for outright purchase price" of the small grader.

•Approved a street improvement district for the paving of West Third Avenue. The public hearing for the notice of creation of the street improvement district is slated for late July.

•And will meet next Wednesday at 7 a.m. at the Windmill to discuss personnel matters regarding the department heads wage and fringe benefit review.

Emergency flood protection

Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block has earmarked another $2 million for emergency flood protection in areas where floods create an immediate threat to lives or property. Block said today he diverted the funds from money appropriated by Congress in early 1983 under the Emergency Jobs Appreciation Act.

USDA's Soil Conservation Service already has committed more than $900,000 of the funds to flood-hazard areas in Mississippi, Utah and Wyoming. Since Oct. 1, 1983, the agency has spent about $16 million for emergency flood protection.

Flooding is more serious than normal this year because of rapid melting of near-record snowpacks in mountainous parts of the West and heavy rainfall on already saturated soils in the South.

Ridge planting demonstration

Demonstration of the techniques involved in ridge planting will highlight an open field tour of farmers and agricultural professionals on June 19 in Wayne County.

Sponsored by Monsanto Agricultural Products Company, the Ridge Planting Demonstration Day will be held from 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. on the Ron and Merle Ring farm located four miles east of Wayne.

Those attending will see demonstrations of the various steps involved in ridge planting, with experts on hand to give detailed "how to" information about this rapidly growing conservation tillage system.

Participating will be Herbert Raab, Monsanto product development representative, and Ron and Merle Ring, host farmers.

In addition, representatives of four herbicide and equipment manufacturing companies — Monsanto, Hiniker, Buffalo, and Ortman — will be on hand with displays and to answer questions.

Lunch will be served at the event. The Ring farm is located four miles east and one-third mile south of the H35 and H15 junction in Wayne.

In case of rain, the event will be held Tuesday, June 26.

Weed tour schedule changed

Continued wet weather in eastern Nebraska has prompted a change in the previously announced Nebraska Weed Science Tour, according to John Furrer, University of Nebraska extension weeds specialist.

Because saturated conditions in the field have delayed and in some cases prevented work with weed research plots, the eastern Nebraska tour has been abbreviated and moved to June 26, Furrer said.

The new schedule calls for the eastern tour to begin at 10 a.m. on that date at the NU Northeast Station at Concord. Plots at the South Central Station at Clay Center will be toured in the evening. On June 27, those on the tour will inspect plots at the North Platte Station and the High Plains Agricultural Laboratory at Sidney, and travel to Scottsbluff for the Panhandle Station tour the morning of June 28.

Reserve corn, oats remain in release

All corn and oats in the farmer-owned grain reserves will remain in release status through June 30, according to Everett Rank, administrator of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

Rank said the decision on the reserve commodities was made following a review today by USDA's Commodity Credit Corporation of average market prices, as reported by USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service, adjusted to reflect the market price received by farmers.

Area women attend convention

Suzie Johnson of Concord and Connie Lindahl of Allen represented the Dixon County Home Extension Clubs at the annual meeting of the Nebraska Council of Home Extension Clubs held in Ogallala on June 5-7. Anna Marie White, Dixon County Extension Agent-Home Economics, also attended.

Included in the convention were workshops dealing with beef cookery, microcomputers and family well-being. Keynote speaker was Joan Burney of Harlington.

Over 600 persons from across the state attended the meeting, sharing ideas and opportunities for leadership development and education.

Deleting crop moisture

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is proposing to eliminate moisture content as a grading factor for corn, sorghum and soybeans.

The moisture content will be displayed on all official inspection certificates which show the official grade determination, said Kenneth A. Gilles, administrator of USDA's Federal Grain Inspection Service.

"Moisture content reflects a condition of the grain and not its quality," Gilles said. "During harvest, moisture content of grain is usually high. Corn, sorghum and soybeans may be graded U.S. Sample Grade because of excessive moisture. When appropriately dried, however, these grains may receive a U.S. No. 1 or 2 grade based on quality."

Moisture content is not used to determine grade in the U.S. standards for wheat, barley, oats, triticale and rye. The revision would bring consistency to the various grain standards, said Gilles.

Comments may be sent through July 23 to Lewis Labakken, Jr., Information Resources Management Branch, USDA, FGIS, Room 0667, South Building, Washington, D.C. 20250; telephone (202) 382-1738.

Nebraska Dairy Expo

Plans are now being finalized for the first annual Nebraska Dairy Expo. The Expo will be held on Friday and Saturday, July 13 and 14 at the Cumming County Fairgrounds in West Point.

Events to be held include the state shows for the Brown Swiss, Ayrshire, Jersey and Milking Shorthorn breeds. A district Guernsey show and an Expo Holstein show will also be held. Other events include judging contests, a Dairy Princess contest, and a Dairy Appreciation Banquet.

Dairy related commercial exhibits will be set up during the Expo to display new ideas, products and technology. Exhibits will include feed companies, A.I. Studs, building companies, and dairy equipment companies.

A catalog with Expo show rules and commercial advertisements will be distributed to dairy producers in the state in the near future.

For further information on the shows or commercial exhibits and advertisements contact Carl Aschoff, Route 3 Box 1, West Point, Nebraska 68788. Phone (402) 372-3609.

The Expo is being sponsored by the West Point FFA Alumni with cooperation from the Cumming County Extension Service and the Nebraska Dairy Breed Associations.

Swine farrowing school

We are still accepting enrollment for the Swine Farrowing School that will be held in Wayne, Thursday June 21, and Friday June 22, reminds Don C. Spitzer, Wayne County Extension Agent.

This is a "hands on" type farrowing school that is designed with the lady farrower manager in mind, but open to all. There will be a charge for this workshop and enrollment must be made through the Wayne County Extension Office no later than Friday, June 15th.

Farmland values dip

During a 12-month period from Jan. 31, 1983 to Feb. 1, 1984, Nebraska farmland values declined nearly 6.8 percent in the state's Northeast District.

This 13-county district includes Wayne, Thurston, Pierce and Dixon Counties.

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln Department of Agricultural Economics annually conducts a statewide farm real estate survey. Questionnaires are mailed each January to individuals across the state who are knowledgeable about farm real estate market conditions in their area.

These individuals then supply estimates of current value on various types of ag land.

Nebraska farmland value declines ranged from about 6 percent in the South District to nearly 11 percent in the Central District.

Declines of farmland values were recorded in the Northeast District on all seven types of land figured in the survey. These land types included dryland cropland (with no irrigation potential); dryland cropland (with irrigation potential); grazing land (tillable); grazing land (non-tillable); hayland; gravity irrigated; and center pivot irrigated.

THE GREATEST decline was in tillable grazing land, dropping in value from $571 an acre to $500 an acre — a decrease of 12.4 percent.

Dryland cropland with no irrigation potential slipped in value from $864 per acre to $779 per acre, a decrease of about 10 percent.

Bruce Johnson, associate professor of agricultural economics at the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources at UNL, wrote an article for the "Business in Nebraska" publication concerning land value drops.

He said the high enrollment in the nation's Payment In Kind program influenced a lesser decline in farmland values in the Southern District, while severe drought conditions in the Southeast District contributed to a 10 percent decline.

Infesting webworms noted on corn

Webworms have been reported feeding on newly-emerged corn planted onto weedy land almost statewide at scattered locations, David Keith, the University of Nebraska extension entomologist said.

"What apparently determined the infestation in these fields was weed growth in 1984, Keith said. In some cases there are no worms in portions of fields disc'd early this year, but heavy infestations in portions disc'd just prior to planting.

THE WEBWORMS, which have also appeared in scattered fields of alfalfa, grain sorghum and grass, will continue to feed for another two weeks or so. Corn stands on weedy acreages should be watched closely, Keith said.

"Farmers should look for ragged or defoliated plants and worms anywhere from 1/8 to 1/2 inch long. They vary in color, but are usually brown to black with mottled heads. Typically there is a lighter brown, almost tan stripe down the middle of the back. The worms produce webbing as they feed, often tying leaves together and hiding inside," Keith said.

"While two or more generations may be produced annually, only this, the first, might be expected to cause problems on corn," he said.

CHOICES FOR control of webworm in corn are somewhat limited, Keith added. Chlorpyrifos (Lorsban 4E) is registered for webworm control. Fenvalerate (Pydrin 2.4E) should reduce these pests if applied according to the label for cutworms.

"It is also possible that soybeans, milo and possibly alfalfa might receive some cutworm damage if weeds are a problem in the fields. Lorsban can be used on grain sorghum and soybeans, and Pydrin is registered for soybeans but not grain sorghum," he said.

There is one drawer in my kitchen that is the "catch-all" drawer. Every kitchen has one. There are burned-down candles for when the lights go out, spare batteries, glue, zip code book, phone book, masking tape, and supposedly, the scotch tape.

I say supposedly because the scotch tape is never there; at least not when I need it. There is a gremlin in this house who takes the scotch tape and never brings it back. No one ever knows who the gremlin is.

One day morning, I wrapped three gifts and sealed them all with masking tape, which was not exactly color-coordinated. The next day, the scotch tape was on the kitchen table, with a note saying, "Look, Mom, I found it!" I quickly put it back in the junk drawer, but it won't be there when I need it next.

Last week, on Thursday, we saw a sight that amazed us. Five hundred bicyclists parked, and camped, in and around Norfolk High School. They were participating in the fourth annual Bike Ride Across Nebraska, and using the northern route. The tents were all colors. The cyclists all seemed to be lean and strong; in some cases, sunburned.

I HEARD ONE of the hardy folks interviewed today. It had definitely been the "septic" route. They were bothered by the weather. There were several rain showers and some hail storms. Some took shelter in barns.

The hills from Ft. Robinson to Tekamah were "too numerous to mention." But most of the original starters finished. That amazes me. I think bicycling is a great form of exercise. But when I set out, to see Nebraska, I want four wheels and a top on the vehicle to protect from the elements. And I can't imagine having those kinds of muscles.

At the end of a long day of travel, I want a hot shower and a comfortable mattress. Sleeping in Gordon High School's gymnasium with 499 other people does not sound like vacation to me! I salute those who did it.

WE ARE DEFINITELY into the "wind and tornado" time of year. Mother Nature can really put on a show. One thing about it, when you see TV newscasts about the devastation, you see neighbors and friends pitching in to help clean up. I heard one farmer in Iowa say last week that he didn't even know some of the people who came.

Whenever rural people have illness, injury, or property damage, their neighbors pitch in to help out.

We were on the receiving end of such help once, and it was one of the most humbling experiences we've had as farm people.

When you sit on the top of a hill, and watch a bunch of tractors prepare and plant a large field in one afternoon, you tend to get all choked up.

Incidentally, this occurred the middle of June 13 years ago, and that corn made a crop.

This past month, we did not take advantage of the offer from the Wayne Chamber for free help during planting, but we were deeply appreciative of the gesture.

In my case, that offer was worth more than all the promotional things the Wayne Chamber will ever do. It said that the city people in this area, at least, recognize that their livelihood is linked to the Ag sector. And then they put actual manpower behind what they said. We were impressed, and grateful.

Replanting of Iris

Iris become crowded after three to five years and usually dwindle in size and appearance. The irises need to be dug and divided. The best time is after they have bloomed.

Before digging, cut the leaves to one-third their height. Lift out the whole clump with a spading fork and wash away the soil. Cut the rhizomes (those rootlike underground stems) with a sharp knife. Each division should have at least one fan of leaves and some good roots.

In replanting, allow space for the plants to multiply. Planting depth should vary with soil type. In sandy soil, the top of the rhizome should be two inches below ground level; in heavy soil just below ground level.

Iris Soft Rot

One of the most common problems in local iris beds is a disease known as soft rot. Soft rot is started by a bacterium which causes a general decline and gradual death of the plant.

Soft rot may be recognized by certain characteristic symptoms which include browning, general unthriftness and a die-back from the tips. The die-back progresses until the entire plant is dead. A look at the rhizomes show they are soft, rotten and foul-smelling. There is no spitting of the leaves as in the case of leaf spot disease.

Control of soft rot begins with the selection of proper planting sites. Since the development of the disease is favored by wet, heavy soils and shady locations, plantings should be made only in well drained soils. Avoid crowding as this favors the spread of the disease.

In seasons when soft rot is severe, the rhizomes should be taken up in August. The rotted portions should be cut out and destroyed and the rot-free rhizomes should be soaked in a chlorox (purex) solution (2 Tbsp/gal. of water) for five to 10 minutes. The irises should be replanted in a new location or the soil sterilized in the old bed. This disease is easily spread to new iris plantings during lifting and dividing operations by spades. The rhizomes should be soaked in the chlorox solutions as described above before replanting.

Time to Prune Pines

Now is a good time to prune pine trees. The following spring pruning principles should be followed for pines:

1. Leave only one leader to avoid a two-pronged tree.
2. Other than removing the secondary leader, don't alter the pine's basic shape.
3. Retain wide-angled branches for the strongest crotches.
4. Remove all diseased wood.
5. Cut off the least desirable of two overlapping or crossing branches.
6. Make cuts at crotches and don't leave stubs.
7. Remove broken branches.
8. Apply wound dressing to cut surfaces which are over one inch in diameter.

Time to check bins

The adage "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" still rings true—especially when it means the difference between good grain storage and a bin full of wet, bug-infested grain.

According to Leroy Peters, a University of Nebraska extension entomologist, keeping a grain bin clean before, during and after the storage period is essential.

Cleaning grain bins will be discussed on FARM & RANCH REPORT Thursday, June 14, at 12:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. The show airs on the Nebraska ETV Network, repeating a second time Saturday, June 16, at 7:30 a.m.

THE BIN should be cleaned thoroughly about two weeks before new grain is ready to be stored in it. One cup of old grain infested with insects is enough to ruin an entire bin of new grain. Peters said, all the more reason to follow these grain bin maintenance tips:

The bin must always be clean, dry and free from dents, holes, rodents, insects and moisture. Outside the bin, check for holes that bugs and rodents could enter through and use a caulking compound or bolts to fill cracks and holes. Replace any damaged metal. Also, pick up any spilled grain, as it attracts bugs, and prevent weed growth—a common place for insects and rodents to hide—by keeping at least 3 feet of barren area between the bin and surrounding vegetation.

Check your combine—vacuum settled grain residue from the bin, the base of the augers and behind inspection hatches. Insects hiding in your combine can infest new grain.

Inside the bin, clean everything from top to bottom. Sweep or vacuum grain fragments and dust from the inside walls and floor. If exhaust fans will not be used, remove them and seal up the area. Also clean the seams of the bin, where channels of metal overlap, an easy place for residue to collect.

And spray the inside of the bin with a residual insecticide. Because this will draw out more insects, wait about one week, then do a final sweeping before storing new grain, Peters said.

Growing degree days lagging

Little progress was made in growing degree day (GDD) evaluations for the week ending June 8. Only nine of the 29 weather stations reporting to the University of Nebraska Agricultural Climate Situation Committee indicated a one-day improvement. Grand Island reported a two-day improvement and Scottsbluff lost one day.

The southcentral portion of the state is further behind in GDD than other sections, with Red Cloud still over two weeks behind for both cool and warm season crops.

Corn nearing four-leaf stage. Nearly all Nebraska corn had been planted by week's end and emergence was 85 percent, according to the Nebraska Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. Ken Hubbard, NU extension climate resource specialist, told the ag climate committee that all maturity varieties of corn that have emerged are now in between the four- and six-leaf stage, with the exception of the area around Arthur, which is almost to the four-leaf stage.

Musk thistle is beginning to show up in some scattered locations, John Furrer, NU extension weeds specialist, said. He noted that there is also some concern about more than normal damage to crops from herbicides. The cool, wet weather and resulting soil compaction has not, in many cases, allowed crops to mature uniformly. Wind damage to crops also allows more than normal herbicide penetration, Furrer said.

Fred Bazendale, NU extension entomologist, told the committee the alfalfa weevil problem has not abated. Hot spots of weevil activity exist in the northeast section of the state but large numbers of the insect are reported across the state. Many producers have begun early cutting because of the problem, he said. An estimated 30 percent of Nebraska alfalfa fields have been harvested.

Webworm activity is still being reported in corn, sorghum, soybeans, alfalfa and even melon patches, Bazendale said. Conditions are right, he said, for increasing numbers of grasshoppers within the next week or so in the Sandhills and Panhandle regions of the state.

The warmer conditions experienced over most of the state last week allowed development of most of the winter wheat crop to the heading stage and estimates for the next 10 days indicate wheat in most areas will be at or into the flowering stage by then.

But, NU extension plant pathologist Dave Wysong reminded the committee that a sufficient drying period between rains is also a good situation for the development of wheat scab. Not a lot has been reported to date, he said, but recent weather patterns favor scab development.

Grain moving at cooperatives

Agricultural cooperatives in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota and Wyoming are moving more grain and supply sales are also up over 1983, according to Virgil Harms, vice president-leasing operations, with the Omaha Bank for Cooperatives (OBC).

Harms explained that the combination of higher grain prices and an end to the government's payments for on-farm storage have increased the flow of grain to cooperative elevators. As a result, cooperatives are requesting additional funds from the OBC to finance their activities from the time they purchase the grain from farmers until they can ship it and receive payment.

Through May, the OBC, which makes seasonal and long-term loans to cooperative, had an average daily loan volume of $1.116 billion, compared to $817 million in 1983. Harms said the $299 million increase in loan volume is primarily due to increased grain movement, but said requests for operating funds as a result of more farmer accounts receivables and increased supply sales have also added to the cooperatives' need for short-term funds.

Farm supply cooperatives are experiencing a better sales year. Last year's Payment In Kind (PIK) program caused sales to drop dramatically at many supply cooperatives as idled farm land cut into the farmers' use of chemicals and fertilizer. Harms added that some of the potential for chemical and fertilizer sales has been reduced this year due to the prolonged wet weather in many parts of the district. Still, farm supply cooperatives should fare better this year than in 1983.

Protection tips on ticks

While repellents are available that will help reduce the potential for tick attachment to dogs or humans, the best protection against them is frequent examination of the body.

Lloyd Andersen, University of Nebraska, extension entomologist, said the American Dog Tick, the most common species found in Nebraska, will feed on humans, pets and any other warm blooded animals. Ticks are usually found in grassy or wooded areas that support field mice or rabbits.

Several species of ticks are found in Nebraska, Andersen said. In addition to the American Dog Tick, which is present statewide, the Brown Dog Tick is found in homes but rarely bites humans, and the Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever Tick which is present in some northwestern counties.

A FEW CASES of Rocky Mountain spotted fever are reported each year from bites by American Dog Ticks, but the possibility of contracting the disease is slight, Andersen said. Their presence, however, can be annoying and cause considerable discomfort for humans and dogs.

If repellents are used, they should be applied to the skin and clothing at least every two hours, the NU entomologist said. Larger areas—around homes, farmsteads and recreation sites—can be sprayed with Sevin, diazinon or Dursban to reduce tick numbers. Only the Brown Dog Tick is a frequent infester of homes, Andersen said. This tick is a parasite of dogs and, after feeding on a dog, will drop off the body and seek places such as cracks and crevices, under carpets and rugs, in upholstered furniture and behind baseboards. In doghouses, Brown Dog Ticks may be found in the roof area. Sprays with a material called resmethrin (a synthetic pyrethrin) have been effective in Brown Dog Tick control, Andersen said.

Medals presented Ceremony honors MIAs

The Nebraska congressional delegation will organize an awards ceremony, in Nebraska, to honor the state's 25 servicemen who are still classified as missing in action or are otherwise unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. At the ceremony, commemorative medals will be presented to the families of these missing Nebraskans. Last year, the Congress authorized the striking of this special commemorative medal to honor the nearly 2,500 American servicemen and personnel who did not return from Vietnam. The bronze medal will be ready for presentation this summer. The ceremony and presentation of the medal, will give Nebraskans an opportunity to show their commitment to the return of these MIAs.

ANOTHER ENGINEER TO BE EMPLOYED

City's Committee to Secure Combustible Plans Now in Hand.

MEETING LAST EVENING

It is convinced that due care of Waste Water is an Essential
Preliminary to Paving.

The committee chosen at a recent meeting to co-operate with the council in figuring out proposed drainage and paving, met with members of the municipal body including the city attorney, last evening. Mr. Kohrbach, engineer from Omaha, was also present. The question of drainage was discussed, and all were convinced that there could be no paving without adequate storm sewers to take care of waste water. It was pointed out that cost of maintaining pavement, besides possible damage suits, would more than make up for the preliminary safeguard insured by drainage. Considering the topography of Wayne, it is deemed imperative and dangerous to pave without making provision to properly dispose of waste water at low points in the town. Members of the committee are not convinced that drainage is necessary, but that people, on clear understanding of conditions, would insist on all necessary storm sewers as a preliminary step. The committee is convinced that the town must drain if it paves. How much drainage will be needed will be carefully figured out.

The plans submitted by Engineer Kohrbach will be checked over by another competent engineer to make doubly sure that no mistakes will follow. It is understood that a Street City engineer will be employed at once, and it is hoped to have the work completed in time for submission to the regular meeting of the council next Tuesday evening when it is expected a special election to vote bonds will be called.

IT IS UNDERSTOOD

That bonds aggregating $400,000 will be required, and it is believed the expenditure, though amounting to little to each property owner, is indispensable, and of the utmost importance in avoiding future grief and expense.

GREGG IS TO LEAVE PERU

Former Wayne College Educator Goes to Wesleyan Chair.

Prof. F. M. Gregg, who has for several years at the head of a department in the Wayne college, has been at the head of a department in the Peru state normal, has accepted a place in Wesleyan university, Lincoln, according to the following report in The Peru Normalist:

Professor F. M. Gregg, after nearly fourteen years of teaching, to leave Peru at the close of summer school, to take the chair of psychology at Wesleyan university. This is a new department for Wesleyan, so Professor Gregg will have an opportunity to build up on lines to his own liking.

Wesleyan is to be congratulated in finding a man so well prepared and equipped by nature and education as is our own Dr. Gregg. Peru never had a man who devoted more hours to his work in originality of planning and adaptability of method he is one of Nebraska's best men.

He will be missed in Peru, not only in the school, but in the community. His work in the M. E. Sunday school will be remembered by the hundreds who have come under his influence. That splendid organization as well as the church building in which it holds its weekly meetings is largely due to the work of Professor Gregg. He will be a great help not only to the Wesleyan school but in the church work of the community. His many friends will wish him and his splendid family God speed in their new field of labor.

Birthday Remembered

Since the opening of the State Normal school nearly nine years ago, no project has more appealed to all the members of the faculty and students than the celebration of the birthday of our president. This year the occasion has called forth greater enthusiasm than of any previous year given to President and Mrs. Conn and Miss Ardath Conn.

The birthday of the president was celebrated on Saturday evening. For more than a month the teachers have been quietly arranging to make this day the occasion of the most complete expression of their loyalty and good will to the president, who is the primary source of the blessings that have come from the institution that has flourished into strength and beauty on Normal Hill.

The arrangement involved a banquet at the Boyd, the presentation of a traveling bag, and a special moving picture drama at the Crystal Palace. The Boyd and Mrs. Beggell fell the delicate task of inviting the guests to the hotel without suspicion and with empty stomachs. So the Conn family were invited to a late supper at the Britt home. Then something went wrong with the range and so all repaired to the Boyd and upon entering the parlor, found the joyous throng, consisting of the members of the faculty and their wives, on tiptoe to receive them.

At eight-thirty the group sat down to the feast prepared with skill and taste, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Sankoski. The place cards were decorated with hand painted tulips and the table bore a profusion of yellow jonquils and ferns. Soon adaptations of many college songs were started by members of the faculty in which much skill in extemporizing appeared, all the songs being directed to the purpose of expressing in a jolly way appreciation of the president and his popular wife and daughter.

At half past nine began a beautiful program by the girls' quartet at the Normal, a new organization consisting of Fern Rahn, first soprano; Ina Hughes, second soprano; Dorothy Bessie, first alto; Nada Addison, second alto. Following is the program:

- Little Maid of Tokio—Quartet.
- Don't Let the Roses Listen—Ina Hughes.
- Carry Me Back to Old Virginia—Misses Rahn and Addison.
- Dost Thou Recall—Quartet.
- Mother Mächrée—Fern Rahn.
- Tell Us, Merry Bird—Misses Bessie, Hughes.
- Frolic of the Sprites—Quartet.

All the numbers were well rendered. Miss Rahn's voice is a round full soprano, and she allowed much poise and brilliancy both in her quartet parts and in her solo. Miss Ina Hughes, already well known to the Wayne public, has a voice of unusually sweet quality which she uses with skill and excellent control. Her work was quite acceptable. The two duets delighted the audience. Miss Addison rendered a pleasing deep alto voice with an unusually smooth and even range. The quartet is destined to be a popular musical organization. Each of the young ladies is taking special work under Professor Coleman. Miss Nora Fergus accompanied on the piano in a very skillful manner. The generous way in which Miss Fergus has given of herself as an accompanist in the past two years, and the high quality of her work in this respect, are much appreciated by the friends of the Normal.

At this point Dean Hahn, in a witty and appreciative address, presented President Conn with the gift. He said that the faculty felt like remembering this birthday in particular because it was the first birthday the president has had since the war, the first one since the "Big" and the first one since the S. A. T. C., a combination of facts, indeed, which must make this birthday notable. He remarked that no proposal ever made to the faculty had been received with such unanimity as the suggestion that they render this expression of appreciation to the president. He said that the teachers all feel that the peculiar quality of genius residing in the leader is that he brings out the best in the individuality of the members of the faculty, allowing them to be co-workers in achievement. We may say that in this the dean certainly expressed that which was in the heart of each one of those present.

The speaker then placed the present in the hands of the president and the group sang, "Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag, and smile, and smile, and smile." With a good deal of emotion President Conn responded to the words of the dean expressing his pleasure in the years of delightful comradeship that have gone so sweetly in the labors of the past decade.

As the group adjourned to the Crystal, the flowers that had decorated the table were handed into the arms of Mrs. Conn, a most popular and beloved lady. Mr. Nielson had prepared an interesting and dramatic entertainment for the conclusion of a delightful evening.

The committee on tables was headed by Mrs. E. H. Burt, Mrs. Wendt, Miss Fairchild and Miss Pierce. The selection of the present was made by Miss Piper and Mrs. Patricia. Thirty-one guests attended the banquet.

Interesting Lecture

On Monday evening, Dr. Lincoln McConnell, a well-known lecturer, gave a popular address on "Dead End"—the present-day condition of the world, the result of the war, as opposed to the instinct of fear, and was interesting throughout. This was a regular number on the lecture course. The coming number, which may be looked forward to with much anticipation, are: Monday evening, March 22, "The April 14," and William Howard Taft on April 16.

Notice to Women

It is generally conceded that Wayne needs a closer, more democratic organization of its women. The matter has been discussed quite weeks by the various women's clubs and societies, and the general sentiment seems to be in favor of such a movement. It is desired that any woman of Wayne or in the country who feels an interest in the problems that confront women in the home or in matters concerning our community life, shall ally herself with this organization.

To perfect such an organization, the women of Wayne and vicinity are asked to meet at the city hall at 4 p. m. Friday, March 21. Consider this announcement a personal invitation for you to be there, ready to help in this organization—A Wayne Woman.

INCIDENT TO SEA OR MUD

Four-horse Team Unable to Complete Delivery of Parcels.

In distributing mud over the city the past week, nature has been carefully impartial. Main street usually carries the biggest burden of mud. Now it is all over town, too deep and too sticky to contemplate without a volcano of aversion and antipathy.

One incident: Saturday night a deliveryman with four horses hitched to his wagon, started out, after making his will and saying goodbye to his family, to deliver orders for a local store. As the night wore on, housewives became anxious about their goods which failed to arrive. The store explained that the parcels had gone. A tracer who was sent out, was unable to find the deliveryman or locate his residence—shameful—resulted in a verdict of $1 for the plaintiff.

Following suits for divorce will be heard by the court later: William C. Fox vs. Rose Lee Fox, William Kallstrom vs. Sanna Kallstrom, and Mrs. Albert H. Carpenter vs. Albert H. Carpenter.
