Undergoes dialysis at home

Coming home is great

by Chuck Hackenmiller
After seven months of going in and out of hospitals, Cleo Reuter has come back to her home on Pearl Street in Wayne.
Both of Cleo's kidneys are not in working order. Her kidneys will only function at 5 percent of what an adult's normal kidney is capable of doing.
She said it all started in early December when she began treatment for her kidney ailments at Providence Medical Center in Wayne. Later, she was transferred to Marian Health Center in Sioux City where she began kidney dialysis treatment.
Last Saturday, Cleo returned to Wayne. She still undergoes the process of hemodialysis. But now, all of the kidney treatment which virtually sustains her life can be done in the confines of her own home.
Attached to a special dedicated electrical line in her home is a computerized hemodialysis machine. A tube line of blood is electronically pumped out of Cleo's arm through a medical device called the hemofilter, which is a transplanted object in Cleo's arm that provides safe blood access for hemodialysis and eliminates needle punctures.
From her arm, the blood travels through the tube to an artificial kidney attached to the hemodialysis machine. After passing through the artificial kidney, the blood returns to Cleo's blood circulatory system.

EVERY MONDAY, Wednesday and Friday Cleo is required to undergo hemodialysis. Each time takes approximately four hours. Despite the inconvenience, Cleo said she wouldn't be without the machine which has now become an important part of her life.
"I think it's wonderful," Cleo said. "This way I don't have to go to Sioux City three times a week for this dialysis."
The nearly $15,000 hemodialysis machine has been on the medical supply market for approximately four years now, according to Chris Reicks who is an R.N. at Marian Health Care Center and also heads the home hemodialysis machine training program, which was initiated by the Sioux City hospital in January of this year.
Besides operating the hemodialysis machine to bring blood to the artificial kidney, Reicks said the computerized equipment will also remove waste products and remove excess fluids built up in Cleo's body.
The machine also comes equipped with a hand crank — to be used basically in emergency situations if power is interrupted during dialysis, she said.

A code system is also incorporated in to the machine. A flashing code number allows Krys Giese, (Cleo's assisting partner) to know immediately what and where the complication is during the dialysis process.
GIESE MUST also check Cleo's blood pressure constantly while the machine is in operation. Also, Cleo's weight must be recorded and entered into the machine prior to the dialysis process — a practice which will automatically tell Giese exactly how many pounds of excess fluid must be removed from Cleo's body.
After each dialysis, the artificial kidney is disposed of and in its place a new artificial kidney is added.
Initially, it took a while for Cleo to adapt to the dialysis machine. "I didn't like it at first. But now I'm used to it. Now I can do as much as I want to at home, although I'm weak and still have to have someone help me walk," she said.
"It's not the most pleasant thing in the whole world. But it's better than being sick all the time," Cleo said while smiling and relaxing in the dialysis room which featured all the comforts of home.
"To Cleo, there is no place like home."

CLEO REUTER goes through hemodialysis at her home under the supervision of Kris Giese and Chris Reicks (at right). The treatment must be carried out three times a week.

Fiscal budget approved Tuesday by city council reflects increase

by Chuck Hackenmiller
Wayne's operating budget will be increased approximately 2.1 percent over the Aug. 1, 1984 to July 31, 1985 fiscal year.
Seven of the eight Wayne city council members approved the budget following a hearing on the proposal Tuesday evening. One councilman, Darrel Heier, was on vacation and was not present at the meeting to cast his vote.
The total budget is nearly $8.1 million, approximately $1 million more than what was budgeted for the last fiscal year which ended on Wednesday (Aug. 1). Vern Russell of Wayne pointed out the dollars difference to the city council members during a public hearing on the budget.
"The city should start cutting back instead of increasing the budget," Russell said.
City Administrator Phil Kloster told Russell there are "some cost increases which are unavoidable."
When Russell mentioned the possibility of the city making cuts in some of the budget areas, Councilman Freeman Decker voiced disagreement.

"Not many cities have the opportunity and advantages we have here in Wayne," Decker said.
He mentioned the most recent purchase of a mini-bus for the senior citizens center, the municipal airport and Wayne's city park system as several of Wayne's advantages over other cities.
"Now you can eliminate some of them, but there are going to be some people unhappy about that, too," he said.
THERE WERE no other objections to the budget proposal presented by the city council, which will have a projected property tax askings for fiscal 1984-1985 of $369,239. That amount is approximately $33,000 more than the previous year's tax asking.
The general fund budget will increase .28 percent over the previous year and highlights include increasing the city's cash reserves $38,000, addition of one staff person for the city hall, establishment of a $15,000 sinking fund for the fire department (which will be joined with the $20,000 in revenue sharing to be distributed to the fire department to be used toward the purchase of another fire-fighting vehicle) and the continuation of energy conservation work and final renovation of $23,000.

Capital improvement projects listed in the budget which will be financed through either grants, special assessments or bond proceeds, included Windom Street and Fairgrounds Avenue paving at $320,000; Roosevelt Park revitalization, $110,208; and 7th and North Main resurfacing, $535,000.
Major objectives and projects in the city's electric fund include implementation of a voluntary energy conservation program, established to reduce peak capacity loads which would result in $100,000 savings annually to the city; completion of the line department's building and final consolidation of operations into the facility; installation and on-line operation of the new computer system; and approximately $250,000 in system upgrade and extension.

NEARLY $1.4 MILLION will be earmarked to the city's water and sewer fund.
Over $150,000 will be available in general revenue sharing funds, according to the final budget. Besides the $20,000 being distributed to the fire department, $15,000 has been set aside for police equipment; $5,100 for city auditorium equipment; $1,500 for Senior Citizens Center equipment; and $40,000 for transfer station equipment upgrading.
Kloster said during Tuesday night's budget hearing there were several items mentioned on the budget statement which had no monetary value but "should be outlined" to the public.
The city will make an effort next year to make all city property accessible to the handicapped. He said the city will continue to study alternate property tax relief programs which would probably need to be brought to the vote of the people.

Work will continue, he said, on the waste water treatment project, the water resource development and strengthening and solidification of city utilities. Volunteer support cutting down on utility usage when peak energy alerts arise could result in lots of savings to the city and in turn could help pay for installation of electrical load control equipment, Kloster said.
"The city will see some marked changes in the advent of our [Wayne's] 100th birthday or as we move over," he added.
IN ADDITION to the budget approval on Tuesday evening, the city council voted in favor of Mayor Wayne Marsh's appointments to various city committees.
Below are the appointees and the committees they will serve:
Housing Authority (5 year term) — Steve Schumacher (one year to replace Howard Witt) and Cletus Sharer.

College Community Board (1-year terms) — Randy Pedersen, Becky Keidel, Robert Enz, Clifton Ginn, Gary Van Meter, Jay O'Leary, Anne Svoboda (non-voting member) and Jim Hummel (non-voting member).

Museum tours Sunday

It will be tours in the afternoon followed by a watermelon feed when the Wayne County Historical Museum celebrates its "grand reopening" on Sunday, Aug. 5 from 2 to 4 p.m.
Dick Baier, president of the Wayne County Historical Society, said the museum is being reopened "because of the Centennial coming up in Wayne."
The reopening celebration will also allow visitors to tour the former Ley home since the museum sustained severe damage from water line breakage that occurred last winter. Baier said the museum home is now in viewing condition since repairs were recently made to the ceilings, walls and floors.
After Aug. 5, the museum will be open from 2 to 4 p.m. every Sunday and on special requests for tours. A tour guide will be present at the museum on Sundays and a tour guide for special requests can be obtained by calling 375-3439, according to Baier.
At the "grand reopening" on Sunday, there will be a $1 serving charge for the watermelon which will be donated to the museum restoration fund. The Wayne Kiwanis Club will be doing the serving.

City sets parking limits

by Chuck Hackenmiller
Parking will be limited on Fairgrounds Avenue and South Windom Street following passage of a resolution Tuesday evening by the Wayne City Council.
In order for the city to receive state funding for road improvement on the two streets, the city had to comply with state requirements on parking areas.
According to the regulations, no vehicles are to be parked at the following locations:
• On the south side of the center line of Fairgrounds Avenue — from South Nebraska Street to South Windom Street.
• The east side of the center line of South Windom Street — from Fairgrounds Avenue to Fourth Street.
• The north side of Fairgrounds Avenue — from Logan Street to South Windom Street.
• And the west side of the center line of South Windom Street — from Fairgrounds

Avenue North to abandoned railroad right-of-way.
Parallel parking will be allowed on the north side of Fairgrounds Avenue, from South Logan Street to city right-of-way drive to transfer station.
Also Tuesday evening, Preston Olson of The Windmill Restaurant in Wayne received approval from six of the seven councilmen present to obtain a special designated liquor permit.
Olson said he plans on enclosing the Windmill nearby parking lot with a five foot wood fence during the Wayne Centennial from Aug. 30 to Sept. 3. People will be able to walk through the restaurant and into a "sidewalk cafe" atmosphere where food and liquor will be served.
HOWEVER, WAYNE Police Chief Vern Fairchild said he opposed the idea of the wooden fence, saying it would be too easy for a customer to pass the alcohol over a five foot fence.

"Although they can still hand things over a seven foot high fence, at least they can't see where [the liquor] is going to," Fairchild said.
Councilman Freeman Decker opposed the special designated liquor permit, but the permit was approved by the remaining council members.
"I don't like the idea of outside beer gardens. You have one and the others will all want to have one," Decker said to Olson.
Olson said his restaurant is trying to cater to the adult people. The band music which he will obtain to play in the sidewalk cafe area will not be hard-rock, he said.
In other action Tuesday evening, the city council:

Architects hired by WSC

The proposed project to add more physical education and recreation space at Wayne State College has taken its first major step.
The Rice Auditorium Expansion Project, the plan to add between 35,000 and 45,000 square feet onto the heavily-used WSC physical education building, moved ahead last week when an architectural firm was hired to develop a program statement.
"We are embarking on a program statement at this time," said Wayne State President, Dr. Ed Elliott. "The actual construction phase of the project will be presented to the Board of Trustees for consideration after the program statement is completed."

The program statement will outline the needs of the physical education division, the campus and the community. The architectural firm of Bahr Varmest and Haacker of Omaha was contracted to do this and address other needs of the proposed building.
"The addition to Rice brings so many possibilities not only for campus use, but also for community use and the general use of the people of Northeast Nebraska," Dr. Elliott said.

"We hope if things go smoothly in the timeline that has been set, that within three years we will be able to begin using the facility."
The $2.5 - $2.8 million project, if approved, would be constructed on the east half of the existing WSC tennis courts north of Rice Auditorium. The tennis courts, which have been damaged by underground water

Claims need to be filed

Depositors in the Postal Savings System who have not filed claims on active accounts since the system's liquidation in 1967 must do so by July 13, 1985.

The Postal Savings System was established in 1911 to provide safe, convenient depositories for Americans who could save and earn interest by purchasing certificates. Individuals were allowed one account with a maximum balance of $2,500 which paid 2 percent interest. The system declined with changing economic conditions and was ordered liquidated by the U.S. Congress in 1966.

Of the remaining accounts, most are of nominal value — $2 or less — while others average about $24 in value.

Depositors or heirs who wish to file claims should send to Department of the Treasury, Government Financial Operations, Claims Review and Settlement Branch, Treasury Annex I, Room 340, Washington, D.C. 20226-001. The claims should contain the Postal Savings Certificate or the depositor's name, account number, name, city, and state of the post office where the account was held.

Claims submitted without all requested documents or information cannot be processed. All claims must be forwarded by July 13, 1985.

Property tax change grows urgent

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

A special legislative session on property taxes this summer appears increasingly likely.

Gov. Bob Kerrey last week said he is feeling "a growing urgency" to deal with the issue of agricultural land tax valuation in a special session.

But Kerrey, speaking at a press conference, stopped short of saying that he intends to call lawmakers to Lincoln to deal with the issue.

"The Kearney case was not an anomaly," Kerrey said. "It was an emphatic decision, and one we're not going to ignore."

The case, which was decided in January by the Nebraska Supreme Court, forced the Buffalo county assessor to lower the tax value of a piece of commercial property to conform with the lower valuations of surrounding agricultural land.

Kerrey said the case makes it clear that the state constitution requires residential, commercial, industrial and agricultural land to be assessed for tax purposes at actual value.

Kerrey said he believes it is fair to value agricultural land separately, noting that in practice it traditionally has been valued at a lower rate despite the constitution.

The main item of business for a special session would be a resolution to submit to voters in November which would amend the constitution to permit a separate, lower tax classification for agricultural land. In effect, the constitutional amendment would legalize the current practice of lower valuation.

A recent poll of senators by the Lincoln Journal shows a division of opinion about a special session.

Asked if they would favor the special session, 17 senators gave an unqualified yes, and seven said they would agree only under certain circumstances. Twelve said no to a special session and eight were undecided.

Most of the senators who qualified their answers said they'd have to see a concrete proposal before they would agree to a special session.

If called, Kerrey and some lawmakers say they want the session to also deal with the general topic of property tax relief. The insolvent Commonwealth Savings Co., and revisions in state banking laws to allow out-of-state interests to acquire Nebraska financial institutions are also possible items on a special session agenda.

Sen. Jim Pappas of Hershey, who favors a special session, said he found strong sentiment among rural senators and mixed emotions among urban senators on the question of dealing with the agricultural land valuation matter in special session. If delayed until the regular 1985 session, no proposal could be submitted to voters before the 1986 General Election.

Last week, Pappas presented Kerrey with a proposed three-item agenda for a special legislative session this summer. A non-committal Kerrey later termed the proposals "helpful."

The proposals Pappas gave to Kerrey were a resolution to submit to voters in November a $140 million state tax increase intended to offset local property taxes; a resolution to submit to voters in November to establish a separate tax classification for agricultural land, and a legislative bill intended to benefit Commonwealth depositors by authorizing the governor to pay — perhaps through a tax increase — tort liability judgments against state government.

Kerrey declined to specify just how close he is to calling a special session. "You're asking me to give odds, like Jimmy the Greek, and I can't do that," he said.

Before convening a special session, Kerrey said he would like a consensus among senators in support of a specific proposal.

He wouldn't say how solid a legislative consensus he would require before calling a special session. "I don't need a lay-down hand; I don't need four acres," he said. "But I'd like to have jacks or better."

To complete the business of a special session and allow sufficient time for selling a constitutional amendment to voters, most statehouse observers say Kerrey will have to make his decision on a special session sometime in early August.

Tightening the belts

Wayne's City Council passed its 1984-1985 budget Tuesday night, calling for a 2.1 percent increase in operating expenditures.

During the public hearing on the budget, the question was brought up as to why the city decided for the increase rather than taking the role of hatchets and slicing the budget figures to represent a decrease.

City administrator Phil Kloster mentioned that many of the increases were unavoidable. Councilman Freeman Decker then mentioned that the city of Wayne has more opportunities and advantages than other cities of similar population. Cuts in some of these departments which Decker mentioned would most likely anger some people.

He is right in that respect.

The city of Wayne has taken pride in its parks, athletic programs, special services to the senior citizens, library, municipal swimming pool, municipal airport and other community-related services.

Nobody likes to pay increases of property taxes. If those unavoidable costs continue to increase in the future, Wayne residents might be forced to take a long hard look at what can be sacrificed in the vicinity of the above area programs.

However, it appears most people in Wayne are convinced that none of the budget line items appeared overstocked with excess funding.

Only one person appeared to speak against the city budget during the public hearing Tuesday evening. There were no comments from anyone at the public hearing stating agreement with the council on the proposed budget.

The public hearing time and dates had been listed in two previous Wayne Herald budget news stories and this reporter was in attendance and had given accounts of all the early morning budget work sessions.

There were no "things passed under the table" as was questioned by the one person who publicly appeared by the council.

All phases of the budget were hashed out openly.

Apparently, city residents are satisfied with the city council's actions on the budget and are willing to put up with the increase in tax asking.

We hope this is the reason for the small attendance at the budget hearing.

Those budgeted appropriations, such as the purchase of a computer or hiring an additional clerical staff member might be characterized as frivolous when the actual expenditures are made during the 1984-85 fiscal year.

But the way to halt needless spending is at the root level, or in this case, when the budget hearing is being conducted prior to city council approval.

One alternative mentioned to side-step the cuts and at the same time, offset the tax asking would be to consider a proposal mentioned by Kloster that is currently being studied by the city of Norfolk.

That proposal would be to establish a 1 percent city sales tax.

The city tax sales in Wayne would probably offset the city property tax askings based on 1983-84 sales tax projections.

Other alternatives to property tax relief will also be discussed during the fiscal year, according to Kloster. If there are alternatives available, the issue will most likely go to the vote of the city of Wayne residents.

It is hoped that when these issues arise, the people of Wayne will respond with a high voting turnout.

Farm real estate values continue to decline

Farm real estate values in Nebraska continued to decline during 1983 and into 1984, according to a study published July 25 by University of Nebraska agricultural economists Bruce Johnson and Ronald Hanson.

The report, "Nebraska Farm Real Estate Market Developments in 1983-84," indicates that Nebraska farmland values have now trended downward for more than 3 1/2 consecutive years.

In nominal terms, the ag economists said, current land values are comparable to values reported five to six years ago. "However," they said, "after adjusting for inflation, the real dollar value (constant dollar) is comparable to land values to 10 years ago."

As of mid-May 1984, land values in Nebraska had declined an average of 28 percent across the state from their peak in early 1981 after nearly a decade of unparalleled appreciation. By type of land, declines from the peak level ranged from 24 to 29 percent.

Last year's drop — 8 percent

For the year ending Feb. 1, 1984, farmland values decreased more than 8 percent. In addition, a special mid-year survey for 1984 indicates that average land values have declined another 8 percent since Feb. 1.

Little demand among potential buyers, coupled with an increased number of land tracts offered for sale, contributed greatly to a weaker land market and falling sale prices, the report said.

The 1984 report, the seventh in a continuing annual series concerning the market for real estate in Nebraska, can be used as an economic barometer within the farm sector. But, the authors stressed, the information and analysis in the report represent very diverse conditions across the state. The trends and relationships reported may not reflect specific land market conditions in a particular locality.

Central, Southeast districts show largest drop

Farmland value declines for 1983-84 occurred in virtually every part of the state and for all types of farm real estate.

However, the report said, the largest percentage declines between Feb. 1, 1983, and mid-May 1984 have occurred in the Central and Southeast reporting districts, where the decline averaged nearly 20 percent.

The smallest decline, 11 percent, was reported in the Northeast district.

In general, cropland values for both dryland and irrigated land decreased between 13 and 15 percent across the state during the 16-month period.

Relatively larger declines were reported for rangeland and pasture, which dropped 18 to 20 percent in value.

Financial stress cited as major cause

Financial problems ranked as the most frequent cause (51 percent of all responses) for selling land during 1983.

The impact of the current financial situation in the farming sector is clearly evident, the report said, considering that financial stress accounted for only 14 percent of all responses as the reason for selling farmland just two years ago.

The 1984 survey contained several questions regarding the impact of Initiative 300 on farmland values. A slight majority of the respondents (52 percent) felt there was no apparent impact in their areas. Of the nearly half that observed some impact, 16 percent reported a considerable impact on farmland values had been felt.

Cash rental rates stable

While farmland values have declined, cash rental rates for farmland have remained relatively stable, according to the report. The 1984 rates for cropland were comparable to 1983, while grazing land rates on an annual unit/month basis were off slightly.

The report suggested that the stability of cash rental rates in the face of land value declines has resulted in a dramatic turnaround in the average rent-to-value ratios, which are currently higher than at any time since the early 1970s.

"This points out," Johnson and Hanson wrote, "that today's values are more reflective of current earning potential. Thus, the economic basis of current values is stronger, and a more stable market for Nebraska farmland may soon be forthcoming."

Copies of the report are available from the Department of Agricultural Economics, 309 Filley Hall, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, NE 68583-0922.

Weekend crowd wants a chance

To the editor:

The weekend crowd would like to comment on the letter about parents knowing where their kids are on the weekends. If you are so concerned about what your kids do on the weekends, why don't you try to keep them in town. But that's a little hard to do when there's nothing to do to keep them here. We are happy just to get together and talk sometimes, but where are we supposed to go and talk.

We no longer can sit anywhere. We go to Sav-Mor and Rich's parking lot and get kicked out. The same goes for Ron's Jack &

Jill, Grace Lutheran and 7th and Main. As a result, the only place we can get together is at a party. Then we have the "WHOLE" town on our backs because that's all we do!

There are many places for you adults to get together, but what about us. It gets too expensive to drive up and down the streets and to see the same movie over again.

How about giving us a place to get together? We're not as bad as you think. We are willing to abide by the rules if you just give us a chance!

Bereuter fights trade remedies act

Trade Remedies Act Contains Dangerous Provisions

Last week I was involved in a fight on the floor of the House against the Trade Remedies Reform Act of 1984. I am opposed to that bill because it contains some provisions that will bring retaliation against United States exports. Agriculture, in particular, has everything to lose and nothing to gain if the bill becomes law in its present form: American agriculture will be a swift and certain target of retaliation. We will give every nation an excuse to impose import controls on our products.

We know all too well that American exporters are frustrated at nearly every turn by increasingly sophisticated foreign trade barriers. Negotiations to break down those barriers seem perpetually to take two steps forward and one step backward—a Michael Jackson step.

I objected particularly to two provisions in the bill. One would allow the United States additional authority to impose antidumping duties when foreign-made products are sold here at less than fair value. The other would expand the countervailing duty code to include government subsidized natural resources, such as natural gas, that is being sold in this country at a higher price than it is in the country exporting it.

To broaden these laws without prior negotiations with our trading partners will endanger the fragile framework of our present open trading system. We may win a battle, but we will lose the war.

When we imposed textile import constraints, wheat exports suffered. When we made threats to open foreign doors for our wine exports, our corn gluten exports became a target for retaliation.

The protectionism embodied in the Trade Remedies Reform Act is an open invitation to retaliation. Every protectionist act calls for another one. America's farmers and ranchers, and this nation as a whole, cannot risk such a result.

Save Billions for Farmers

I testified before a joint hearing of the House committees on Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, and Ways and Means on my proposal for a National Agricultural Export commission last week. That Commission, which would include producers, exporters, and representatives of agri-business, would examine agriculture-related trade policies and make recommendations to the Congressional committees that affect those policies.

Total United States agriculture exports were $34.8 billion in 1983. Nebraska was sixth in the nation for agricultural exports. In 1983, the export of wheat, corn, soybeans, beef, and other agricultural goods from Nebraska amounted to $1.75 billion. That averages about $1,100 for each Nebraskan.

There is no question that exports are the lifeblood for the people of Nebraska and for the farmers of the Midwest.

The actions that our government takes with regard to agriculture must be part of a well thought out policy. Agriculture is affected by foreign policy action, by trade legislation, by economic trends, and by foreign assistance programs. We must have rural, agricultural representation when these policies are developed.

PREVIOUS ACTIVITIES, held every Monday evening since June 11, have included a movie, magic show, kite making, swap meet, where each youngster brought a book, game or toy to trade, cook and sample, when snacks were prepared and shared, a craft night, and a game night.

A punt, pass and kick contest is scheduled Aug. 6. The final event, Aug. 13, will be a wiener roast and picnic in the park for the entire family. Youngsters also will release balloons.

event of rain, parents are asked to listen to KTCH radio for an alternate indoor site.

REGISTRATION forms for the camp have been sent to scouts. The deadline to return registrations has been extended from Aug. 1 to Saturday, Aug. 4. There will be no registration at day camp.

Registration forms, including the $3 fee, should be sent to Sue Sandahl, Rt. 1, Wakefield, Neb. 68784.

The Wayne State College track as it looked in 1925. Rice Auditorium, named for the president who had laid out its plans, was also built near the track during the 60's. Later it got an addition with an intramural gym, dispensary and the Esther Denitz Carlson Natatorium, named for a long time faculty member. Track, football and basketball were offered in the early days of the college. Added to that now are wrestling, swimming, baseball, track, cross country, golf and tennis for men; volleyball, basketball and softball for women.

Wayne's Junior Legion baseball team took the first step towards a return trip to the State Tournament with a 14-3 win over Jackson on Tuesday, July 31 in the opening game of the Class B Area 3 Junior Legion baseball tournament being held in Wayne.

The win advanced Wayne to the second round for a game against West Point, scheduled for 6 p.m. this evening (Thursday) at Overlin Field. Their overall season record moved to 15-12 with the victory.

Jackson dropped into the loser's bracket with a 6-9 overall record in their first year of the Junior Legion baseball.

A walk for Overlin brought in another run and loaded the bases, setting the stage for a Chris Wieseler grand slam home run, his second of the season.

Wayne finished out their scoring with two runs in the fourth inning by Malý and Pat Melena.

Jackson added a single run in the fifth inning when Pat Walsh scored on an RBI single by Joe Hogan after getting on with his own basp hit.

Wieseler was the big hitter for Wayne in the win, hitting two for four at the plate with a four run homer and a double.

Dave Longe also hit well with three singles in three trips to the plate and Kevin Malý added a double and two singles in four at-bats.

Pitcher Todd Dorcsey was credited with the win, going four and one-third innings before being relieved by Steve Overlin. Overlin came in with one out and two men on in the top of the fifth and threw two strike outs to retire the side and end the game.

Field day scheduled

The University of Nebraska Northeast Station Field Day at Concord has been set for Tuesday, August 21.

Field Day tours will be held beginning at 2 p.m. and will continue until 8:30 p.m.

Tours will highlight the latest research findings and include:

- A rainfall simulator used to measure the value of crop residue cover in reducing soil erosion. A 20% residue cover was effective enough to reduce soil erosion by at least 50%.

- A stop at the swine nursery to hear about an experiment which produced a 30% energy savings with no difference in animal performance when the night-time temperatures were reduced.

- A stop to look at the equipment used to safely apply insecticides through a center pivot.

- A stop to view 150 soybean varieties being evaluated for yield performance.

- And a stop at the beef cattle feedlot to discuss proper feedlot design. Research will be discussed which demonstrates a definite economic advantage with feedlots having adequate slope and properly designed mounds.

Other current research at the Northeast Station will be included on the tours which will be conducted by Northeast Station and University of Nebraska research and extension specialists.

Lunch will be available on the grounds.

Local chosen dairy princess

Judy Bauermeister, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Bauermeister of Wayne, has been selected Nebraska Dairy Princess for 1984-85.

Miss Bauermeister, who was crowned in late June at Seward, has been busy making appearances in parades and handing out awards at shows.

She will continue promoting dairy products in stores, schools, shows, parades, conventions and booths at fairs throughout the year.

She will be a sophomore this fall at Nebraska Wesleyan University in Lincoln with a double major in special education/elementary education.

The following article on heat stress for swine was taken from the July Northeast Nebraska Livestock Newsletter, written by Extension Specialists Terry Mader and Mike Brumm.

Hot weather relief for swine
When the weather is hot, reduced feed intake is one of the first symptoms of heat stress in market hogs. If feed intake is reduced by a large amount, rate of gain is also depressed.

Methods to maintain feed intake for both market hogs and sows in lactation include (1) increase the energy density in the diet by use of high fat concentrates or heat treated soybeans and (2) provide cooling methods to improve the pig's rate of heat loss. The most common and effective cooling method for market hogs is to provide shade and sprinklers. Kansas State research has demonstrated that wetting the pig and then allowing the pig to dry is most effective.

Sprinkler or fogger systems should be on timers set to run 2 minutes out of 10 whenever air temperatures are over 85 degrees F. In farrowing houses, care needs to be taken to avoid wetting and chilling the baby pig. On woven wire flooring, Kansas State researchers report good results using drip emitters and a low pressure trickle irrigation system. Details of this system are available from Brumm at the Northeast Station. Another method used successfully in farrowing houses is directing cooled air at the sow's snout (zone or snout cooling).

Breeding and gestating swine also need heat relief whenever the temperature is over 85 degrees F. Symptoms of heat stress in boars include partial or total sterility with little effect on libido 4 to 6 weeks after the stress. Sows bred during the period of heat stress or exposed to heat stress within 30 days after breeding may fail to conceive, recycle after setting or conceive small litters. Heat stress in the last 30 days of gestation may increase the number of stillborn pigs.

Grub control
The best time to treat Nebraska cattle with systemic grubicide is mid-July to October 1.

Because of the geographical difference in heel fly activity, southern cattle must be treated earlier. They will have grubs in their backs much earlier than native cattle.

Cattle from Texas, Oklahoma and other southern states should be treated June to August. Cattle from higher elevations in New Mexico and Arizona can be treated from July to October. Cattle moving into feed lots from the southern states in June should be treated if they will be marketed this fall.

Nebraska cattle that will be marketed from mid-December through April should be treated in August and September.

All systemic insecticides registered for grub control have been very effective if they contract the skin so that they are absorbed. Generally, pour-on formulations have been a little more reliable than sprays if sprays are not applied with high pressure at close range.

Greenbugs continue to increase in area

Greenbugs and corn leaf aphids (CLA) continue to increase in grain sorghum and time for treating sorghum for greenbugs is getting short, according to Dave Keith, University of Nebraska extension entomologist.

Many fields can still benefit from greenbug treatment, particularly the later-planted ones, he said.

Undersides of the lower leaves should be checked. If greenbugs are numerous enough to cause yellowing or browning of one lower leaf, treat immediately.

Keith said farmers also should look for greenbug "mummies," the brown shells of dead greenbugs, killed by a small parasitic wasp. If the mummies account for 10 to 15 percent of the total infestation, then parasites should bring them under control shortly and insecticide application should be delayed.

Suggestions for control of greenbugs include Cygon 400, Lorsgran 4E, malathion, diazinon, Metasystox-R, Di-Syston 15G and Thimet 20G by ground; or parathion, Di-Syston EC or Furidan 4F by air.

Corn leaf aphids are not generally considered to be of much economic importance, he said. The blue-green whorl feeders may cause yellow strippling and eventual reddening or browning of the flag leaf, but this damage is not considered to be serious.

However, Keith said, if moisture stress continues and CLA persist in the whorls and upper leaves through booting and head emergence, then some parthial head sterility may result. "In this unusual event," he said, "spraying might pay."

Control of CLA is accomplished with broadcast sprays of the same materials suggested for greenbug control.

I think I must be the last living female without pierced ears! My mother, my sister, and my daughters constantly tell me I should have this done, and they assure me that it won't hurt. Even my friends join in this chorus. I tell them all that if God had wanted me to have holes in my ear lobes, he would have put them there!

The past few years, cows have all acquired pierced ears, and their ear tags come in all colors. They are numbered for identification. Plus, they are treated with a chemical that resists flies. Sometimes, around here, I'm tempted to have some of those inserted. Now I read that the darned flies are becoming immune to the chemicals. It figures. Bacteria keep requiring larger amounts of penicillin, too.

If's been a busy week! We went to Hastings last Saturday to help our niece get married in a beautiful ceremony.

They left for Yellowstone, and we went on to Lincoln for the alumni banquet of Lincoln General Hospital. The class of '59 celebrated 25 years, and 19 of the 41 were there. I was greatly relieved to see several other chubby people. There were the usual hugs, squeals and laughter, and a few of us finished talking of Mom's patio.

RAY ATTENDED music camp at WSC this week. For years, this event was held the same week as county fair, which made it impossible for our kids to participate. Right before the fair still makes it hectic, but at least possible. It is a busy, intensive, fun week, culminated by concerts. We spent several hours in Ramsey again, enjoying free entertainment.

The guest clinician, a man from North Texas State University, kept us laughing Saturday night. Then he got serious and told the campers, "You are all special because you have a gift from God. Your parents can buy horns and pay for music lessons, but you have the gift. The gift of music is priceless. Remember to make music every day, if not for an audience or your parents, then for God."

He also played his own instrument with the jazz band he directed. He warned us, "If you practice one hour every day, you will be bald and fat!" What a character.

Then, on Saturday night, we watched the opening ceremonies in Los Angeles. That magnificent choir sang, "Reach Out and Touch," while the participants joined hands. When the black female athlete cried, I did, too.

And a Wayne girl is in the Olympic band — what an experience. Did you ever notice how much music is involved at athletic events? You really "can't have one without the other."

I TOPPED off the week with a 40th anniversary observance, seeing friends and exchanging news. A neighbor informed me they are moving to town and have sold their farm to a nephew who lives in California. It was his grandparent's farm; and when he was here in June, he looked around at the lush vegetation and said, "Why would anyone want to go to Hawaii?" I'm going to try very hard to remember that question next winter.

Thanks to my friends with gardens, we are feasting on cucumbers, cabbage, zucchini, corn, green beans, tomatoes and muskmelon. For dessert, we have peaches from California.

It's time to get this in an envelope and get my daily walk. This week, it will be in the corn field. I'll bet Hawaii doesn't have cackle burrs!

OAT HARVESTING on the ag scene continued Tuesday afternoon at the Dwaine Bjorklund farm south of Wakefield.

Increase in farm loan funds is approved

The Senate Agriculture Appropriations Committee Wednesday approved Senator Jim Exon's request to increase the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) lending authority to $650 million for 1985.

The Senate Agriculture Appropriations Committee, on Exon's recommendation, increased the amount by $50 million. The House of Representatives approved only $150 million.

"This is another step in our continuing efforts to help farmers who are suffering through the worst economic times the agricultural economy has seen since the 1930's," Exon said.

In June, Exon introduced legislation to increase the lending authority of FmHA to $450 million. Later that month he increased the amount to $650 million. Exon said the increase would be the first installment of a three year $1 billion program he would be seeking. The action was supported by the Independent Bankers Association of America.

"The amount proposed by the House of Representatives simply was not sufficient to go around to all of the farmers who need assistance," Exon said. These are critical times for many farmers, ranchers and small business suppliers and they need extended credit terms in order to survive," he added.

The former Nebraska Governor said he would push for approval of the increase by the full Senate. He cautioned that in the long-term the agriculture crisis will never be resolved simply by extending credit. "We must formulate programs that increase prices for our producers products," which he said is the real need in agriculture.

Soil loss greater after soybeans than after corn

A comparison study of various tillage systems has shown that soil loss following soybean crops is greater than loss following corn, but a 20 percent cover of either soybean or corn residue can reduce erosion by 50 percent. The study found that while several methods would leave this degree of cover after corn, only one tillage method, no-till, would leave that amount of residue after soybeans.

Results were presented recently at the summer meeting of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers at the University of Tennessee here by University of Nebraska Extension Agricultural Engineer Elbert C. Dickey.

Dickey explained that following harvest of either corn or soybeans, the soil surface is generally covered with comparable amounts of residue, often exceeding 90 percent cover. However, soybean residues tend to be fragile and thus are easily destroyed by tillage operations.

The fragile residues combined with the loose, mellow soil that generally occurs following soybean production contribute to differences between erosion of soybean and corn production areas. Dickey said that the same tillage treatments left about 40 percent less surface cover in soybean residues than in corn residues.

The study showed that a 20 percent residue cover following soybeans would reduce erosion by 50 percent of that which occurred from a tillage treatment with little or no residue cover after planting.

Assuming a 50 percent reduction in erosion is desirable, then several tillage system alternatives are available for use in corn residues. But only the no-till method consistently left a 20 percent cover in soybean residue, he said.

Dickey pointed out that a single operation of either a blade plow or field cultivator may offer some opportunity for limited tillage in soybean residues while leaving enough residue cover to achieve about a 50 percent reduction in soil losses. But those tillage systems, which included a disking operation, did not leave enough residue cover in soybeans to be considered a conservation tillage system.

Much of the cropland in the midwestern United States is farmed continuously with corn or corn/soybean rotations, and the area in soybean production in Nebraska has nearly doubled since 1975. Therefore, tillage systems which leave a protective cover of crop residue on the soil surface are important among the least costly erosion control practices.

Tillage methods evaluated in the study in both soybean and corn residues were the moldboard plow, chisel plow, disk, strip rotary till, till-plant and no-till systems.

The methods were evaluated for their effectiveness in reducing erosion following soybean production as well as to measure soil erosion during spring planting through established crop canopy in soybeans and corn.

Using rainfall simulation techniques, the study determined that the moldboard plow system generally led to the greatest soil loss while no-till had the least. In soybean residues, soil losses from the disk were about the same as from moldboard plow.

Following corn, no-till planting reduced erosion by as much as 94 percent of that which occurred with the moldboard plow treatment, but the no-till reduction was only about 60 percent following soybeans.

Dickey said that with the same tillage method, erosion following soybeans was about 44 percent greater than for corn on silty clay loam with a 5 percent slope and more than 350 percent greater than for corn on silt loam soil with a 10 percent slope.

Honeybees in danger

The necessity of honeybees in the overall agricultural picture cannot be argued, according to Dave Keith, University of Nebraska extension entomologist.

Honeybees produce $100 million worth of honey and wax each year. "But most important," Keith said, they pollinate crops, adding another $10 million to their total value."

Bees do not observe property lines and many inadvertently enter insecticide-treated fields. Since most insecticides are toxic to honeybees, many are killed by direct spraying or by residues left in fields.

Keith listed precautions that can be taken to eliminate most instances of honeybee damage:

- Treat fields only when necessary — when pests are numerous enough to justify the use of an insecticide. This is a good rule to follow regardless of the presence of bees.

- Treat crops only when they are not in bloom. If corn is shedding pollen and corn borers or between bean cutworm must be controlled, check the field for foraging bees. If many bees are observed and treatment is essential, treat with a material that is less likely to be taken back to the hive and cause additional destruction to the colony.

"Take precautions so that honeybee colonies are not treated directly with any spray material. • Check crops to be sprayed for heavy concentrations of blossoming weeds. If bees are present in significant numbers, withhold treatment until the beekeeper has been notified and has had a chance to move or protect his bees.

"And treat only parts of fields that have significant pest infestations. Often only a part of a field may need treatment, particularly in the case of grasshoppers or spider mites. Concentrate on the borders.

Keith said bee losses can be eliminated or cut to a minimum by the conscientious, responsible use of insecticides.

Subsoil water use and insects are concerns

Plants are beginning to use subsoil moisture in most parts of Nebraska, Ralph Neld, University of Nebraska extension climatologist, told the NU Cooperative Extension Service Agricultural Climate Situation Committee here Monday (July 23).

With rainfalls averaging 0 to 1 inch over the last 9 days, and potential evapotranspiration of 2 to 3 inches, subsoil moisture is being used, he said.

The Nebraska Crops and Livestock Reporting Service estimates topsoil moisture supplies 72 percent short as of July 23.

Some insect numbers up
Corn borer infestations of from 20 to 60 percent were noted in central Nebraska corn fields last week. Steve Knight, state entomologist, said some of the borers are still in the whorl but that most have already gone into the stalk. There have been no signs of second generation borers to date, he said, but they will probably appear within a week or so.

Numbers of greenbugs and corn leaf aphids (CLA) are increasing in grain sorghum, ac-ording to NU extension entomologist Fred Baxendale.

Greenbugs, bright green with a prominent dark green stripe down the center of the back, feed on the underside of leaves. Infestations are noticeable by reddish spots on leaves. Reddened leaf areas enlarge as numbers of greenbugs increase. Eventually, leaves turn brown from the outer edges toward the center as they begin to die.

CLA are bluish-green with black legs, conicles ("tail pipes") and antennae. Baxendale said the CLA congregate in the whorl or on upper plant parts and usually disappear when the plant heads out. Infestations may result in partial plant-head sterility and can be accentuated if accompanied by heat stress. In spite of some possible yield reduction, chemical control of CLA is seldom justified.

Recommendations for chemical control of greenbugs and CLA are the same, Baxendale said. Information on control recommendations is available from local Cooperative Extension offices.

Exposition winner

A QUARTER HORSE mare named Extra Terrestrial exhibited by Susan Ray of Carroll was selected as champion 2-year-old mare in halter competition during the Nebraska State 4-H Horse Exposition at Fanner Park in Grand Island July 17. Susan is the 17-year-old daughter of Vivial Bowden. Her horse is owned by Mr. and Mrs. Dean Buller of Cozad. A trophy was provided by Radio Station KRNV of Lexington. Previously, Susan showed another horse to the advanced western pleasure championship at the 1983 Ak-Sar-Ben 4-H horse show. Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources photo.

While at camp the scouts worked on a variety of skill awards and merit badges including basketry, leatherwork, woodcarving, rifle shooting, athletics, personal fitness, environment, first aid and astronomy. In addition they participated in recreation activities, such as a tube float down the Platte, Five-volleyball and biking to Camp Eagle.

The scouts were able to each advance to the next rank because of the work they did. Moving the rank of First Class were Stuart Clark, Chris Loole, Mike Mogus and Matt Tappe.
