NFO Collection Point proposed in Wakefield

by Chuck Hackenmiller

"Farm organizations have come to realize that there is more to be gained by working in tandem to solve problems rather than enjoying the luxury of competing against each other. And that if there is money to be gained in livestock raising, it will come from the marketplace."

Those were the messages projected by Bill Sellhorst of Dodge, Nebraska and Merle Suntken of Corning, Iowa.

Suntken is director of the hog division for the National Farmers Organization (NFO) and Sellhorst is a NFO member of the Nebraska Livestock Directors. Both individuals talked about the establishment of an NFO Collection Point near Wakefield.

It will be called the Wakefield NFO Collection Point, Inc. With this arrangement, hog producers will deliver their livestock production together in a large block, placing them in a position to bargain with meat packers for more money for their product.

Today, Suntken said it isn't feasible for the hog producer to take his hogs straight to the packing plants. "You can no longer go to the marketplace yourself. You have to build volume and that is where you are noticed by the packing plants," he said.

HE SAID there are few good modern, aggressive packing plants around the area. Few packing plants in the area kill 1,000 hogs a day when compared to much larger kill numbers during the days of private ownership packing plants.

"I can foresee a time in the future when producers will sell their products to grocery stores, having the packing companies do the custom killing for them," Suntken said.

Suntken said that in 1985, the United States imported approximately 9 percent of its pork used by consumers. "Part of that 9 percent of pork which I am feeding to my children is coming from communistic countries — such as Poland," he said. One of the largest importers is not Canada but Denmark, which supplies a significant amount of canned hams to the U.S.A., he said.

In 1980, 2 percent of all pork here in the United States was imported. That figure has jumped to 9.46 percent in 1985.

Some of the incentives which an NFO Collection Point will offer, according to Suntken, include day ahead pricing; 80 percent payment on grade and yield at the time of delivery; in transit death loss protection; offer volume incentive programs; forwarding contracting; and trust protected checks (which means that if a packing plant happens to close its door and has your hogs, your check will still come).

Sellhorst said the drop in hog production is hurting the farmer now. Meat consumption among consumers is down only because "there is no more to eat," he said.

"We have met the enemy, and he is us," he added.

A COLLECTION point allows the producer to control the distribution (holding the hogs until the price is profitable) and the check-off funds the collection facility gathers can be used to join with other collection points to promote pork across the world.

Cost for obtaining the collection facility, which is north of Wakefield, will be $12,500 for option on the piece of land and another $20,000 to renovate the facility.

"This program is for all hog producers. NFO is not a fraternity, but it consists of farmers and ranchers collecting for a fair value on the marketplace," Sellhorst said.

The facility could be in operation by the 16th of April.

Sellhorst said that within a 40 mile radius of Wakefield, there are approximately 165,000 hogs. "Our potential in the Wakefield area is to have 2,000 head of hogs a week (delivered to the collection point) without batting an eyelash," Sellhorst mentioned.

"It is set up for the benefit of all people. However, when you are confident with the operation of the collection point and see how it benefits you, we expect you to walk up to the manager or me and say 'hey, I want to be a [NFO] member,'" he reported.

Staffing the collection point will be a full-time manager and a full-time secretary.

Expenses the NFO collection facility accumulates is financed by certain rates per hundredweight that is deducted from livestock producer's haul. The plant manager gets 8 cents per hundredweight and the secretary would receive 5 cents per hundredweight.

NFO, Inc. receives 15 cents per hundredweight to cover items such as scale tickets, legal costs, meeting bonding requirements and bargaining with the packing companies. Also included in the deductions are cents for the check-off, cost for transit insurance, and insuring all transactions and keeping the transaction clean.

ALL TOLEDED, the amount taken out would be approximately 90 cents per hundredweight.

"This is considered an investment and not a cost in the collection point. To try and have this kind of service elsewhere, you couldn't have it for under $15,000 a year," said Sellhorst.

Although the collection point is in the control of the local producers, there will be a local board of directors selected. As the collection point becomes more established, the board of directors will be an elected position, Sellhorst said.

He added that the facility will be a well-oiled machine in bringing the livestock producers the best price on the marketplace.

MERLE SUNTKEN stresses a point in his comments at the NFO Collection Point meeting.

Ag secretary 'a disappointment'

It appears that a top spokesman of the Farm Crisis Committee (based in Emerson) has lost some hope in gaining any amendments to the recently enacted agriculture farm bill — even with a new leader at the helm.

Tim Wrage of Emerson told nearly 100 people at a NFO Collection Point meeting Thursday evening in Wakefield at the American Legion Hall that he is highly disappointed with recently appointed U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Richard Lyng and the whole situation.

Lyng met with ag leaders across the state in Grand Island, Gibbon and Kearney last week to listen and report back his findings on the agricultural situation to President Ronald Reagan.

"What we got now [in the current farm bill] is what we are going to keep," Wrage said.

Lyng indicated no changes would be accepted on the farm bill, that he would not initiate any changes and that he was sure Congress was not going to make any changes, Wrage said.

"I left Grand Island of this opinion: they are not going to help us. They are not going to stop the imports," he mentioned.

"We [the ag community] have got to do anything we can to raise our standard of living. And one direction to go is to take things into our own hands," he added.

Foot tapping music

Concert band to perform

"We keep getting better with every performance," said Gary Davis, band director at Wayne State College.

According to Davis, the audience will reap the benefits of those improvements when the WSC Concert Band performs at the annual Spring

Band Concert, April 15 at 8 p.m. in Ramsey Theatre in the Val Peterson Fine Arts Center.

Davis said the 80-person band will play several concert numbers including "Fantasia in G" by Timothy Mahr. "I think it's the hardest piece we've ever tried to play," he said.

The selections will also include a musical salute to Gershwin with numbers such as "I've Got Rhythm," said Davis. "The audience can just tap their feet along with it. It's just music we like to play that we think the audience will like to listen to."

It's your library!

People should utilize the library services this community of Wayne — and other communities — provides for its residents.

Your tax dollars pay for it.

Research shows that children who have been exposed to reading and other cultural experiences before beginning school have a better chance at success in formal learning.

But developing the reading habit at any age will put you on the winning track. Reading opens the door to knowledge, and knowledge gets you on your way.

Libraries have long been concerned with promoting reading to children. Story hours and summer reading activities are among the children's programs that libraries offer.

Today, libraries are also working to promote reading to adults. Large print books make reading easier for many people. Book discussion programs let people share the stimulating ideas of great literature.

The Wayne Public Library is filled with information and ideas on studying for tests, selecting a college, finding a job, making a career change and planning retirement.

You can find out how to prepare your taxes, repair a car, buy a house or plant a garden. Or if you want to catch up on some local history, turn on the microfilm display machine and let the past take you back to newspaper stories happening years and years ago.

National Library Week is April 6-12, the perfect time to catch the winning spirit. Get a head start at the library."

A helping hand

The project which the Helping Hands 4-H Club is achieving — repairing toys and other items for the Goldenrod Hills-sponsored Toys for Tots program — is commendable.

In the story which appeared in this newspaper recently day, it gave the impression that the club would accept only dolls. That it does. But it neglected to mention that it will accept anything else that could make a little child happy when Christmas arrives this year.

They wanted this mentioned. Think about it when you're doing your spring cleaning and you have some things that are undamaged or can be easily repaired — things which your family has outgrown.

Then think about how happy you'll make a needy youngster when that gift is in their hands at Christmas.

Education on problem needed

Vandalism to parks combatted

Editor's Note: While the following pertains to national forests, it can also apply to area parks and rest areas, which is the reason for publishing.

You don't expect to find bullet holes in your bathroom, but visitors to our National Forests and the other public parks do encounter such things, and worse.

Sewage is often dumped into streams, trash is strewn among trees and many signs show the results of target-practice.

Unfortunately, the freedom these lands offer for people who want to get away from it all also provides opportunity for theft and destruction.

For example, during a short period last summer a road sign, a pump, a picnic table, and stockpiled crushed rock were stolen from the Nezperce National Forest in Idaho. While these thefts were being committed, vandals also shot up a toilet and cut down several signs. This destruction in just one forest cost the taxpayer more than $2,000. For all 156 national forests, estimates of damage run as high as $3 million a year.

Although cattle guards, recreation sites, trees and cabins are frequent victims of vandalism on national forests, signs seem to be a favorite target.

"There's no particular season for sign destruction, it seems to be a year-round sport for some people," said Noel Johns, a special agent assigned to the Forest Service's headquarters in Washington, D.C. "It's gotten so bad on some national forests that it's hard to find a sign that hasn't been shot at least once.

Some of our signs are so full of bullet holes that their messages are illegible.

JOHNS SAID VANDALISM is not limited to facilities and equipment. "The resources of the national forests are frequent targets of abuse," he said. "For instance, operators of motorcycles and other off-road vehicles sometimes run rampant over hillsides and willfully through marshy meadows creating ruts and destroying vegetation and important wildlife habitat."

Johns said the increased use of wood stoves and fireplaces has also spawned a vandalism problem — timber thefts. Thieves cut some of the best trees in the forest for firewood. Christmas trees are often illegally cut and people even destroy trees for fence posts or poles.

"Pothunters" who ransack archeological sites on national forests have created another kind of vandalism problem. Pothunters dig up old burial sites in search of pottery that can be sold. But the historical information destroyed when they desecrate a site can't be replaced by any amount of money, said Johns.

"There are so many historical sites on the national forests that policing them is impossible, but if we try to protect them by putting fences around them we would only point out their location to potential pothunters," said Mike Beckes, an archaeologist working on the Custer National Forest in North Dakota. As an example, Beckes said the Forest Service put a protective transparent cover over Initial Rock, a soft sandstone where two of General Custer's soldiers carved their names on the way to the Battle of Little Bighorn. Unfortunately, someone shot holes in the cover.

Sometimes offenders are caught, but the Forest Service admits it's not easy to apprehend vandals. Progress is being made, however, by increasing the presence of special agents and law enforcement officers on national forest campgrounds and by patrolling Forest Service roads more frequently.

"COOPERATION with local law enforcement agencies and the increased presence of volunteer campground hosts are also playing a more important role in combatting vandalism," Johns said.

Better public understanding of the problem and efforts to promote concern for our national forests also show great promise for effectively reducing vandalism. Woody Owl, the Forest Service anti-litter symbol, makes hundreds of visits to schools each year to encourage young people to protect national forest property and to "Give a hoot, don't pollute." In fact, education may be the key to solving the problem of vandalism.

"If we can educate people to the fact that national forest property belongs to everyone, not just the federal government, I think we'll see a decrease in vandalism," Johns said. "After all, not even vandals destroy their own personal property. It's time," he said, "for the citizenry to get involved in helping with this problem. We should all take pride in America."

Lions say thanks

The Wayne Lions Club thanks the citizens of Wayne for their support the weekend of March 22-23 in their campaign drive for contributions for the American Diabetes Association. Almost $700 was raised in the door to door campaign.

The Wayne Lions assisted the Diabetes Association in this drive because diabetes is the leading cause of blindness, and sight preservation is one of the major projects of the local Lions and of Lions Clubs throughout the world. In the past the local club has conducted several free diabetes screening clinics and assists those who are unable to pay for proper eye care.

For those Wayne citizens who were not home when the campaign came to your door, and who wish to contribute to the drive, contributions can be mailed directly to the American Diabetes Association, 7377 Pacific St., Omaha, NE 68114. Again we thank you for your support.

Must we wallow?

We've come a long way baby since the early 1900's when if a young lady wore her skirt high enough to expose an ankle, she was labeled a harlot. The question now is, how much farther do we want to go. After our entertainers have taken all their clothes off in public, and according to the entertainment sections of the Sioux City and Omaha papers we have already reached that plateau. Anything becomes boring after a time, so what do they progress to keep the customers coming in? Would it be intercourse on the stage done to acid rock and flashing colored lights?

Liberal minded people would defend it, saying it gives the audience a chance to shuck off their inhibitions. Artistic minded people would defend it saying with its done to classical music with soft lighting its really an art form. No doubt certain members of the press would remind us that artists have been painting nudes for hundreds of years, and that sin was around before and after Jesus. True, but must we wallow in it?

The next progression the readers can figure out for themselves. Would we really have many levels to go down until its flood time again?

Signed,
Over the hill, and completely out of it.

Burned Up

Not funny

What a surprise, me writing to the editor, didn't think I would ever do it. Anyway, here goes. About a half hour ago I heard the "boss" of the "Plant Market," talking or advertising on radio station "KTCH", both of Wayne, Nebraska, saying how busy they were and he needed help, so would give away some geraniums — about 1000, no limit, thinking people would not take advantage of him.

Well! I called down long distance and he laughed and said, "that's an April Fool joke on you, Ha Ha." Then he wonders why people don't shop at home. This is why. WHAT A WAY TO ADVERTISE. How childish. I'll not go near his place of business again and I told him this. I'll never trust his advertising on the radio again. April 1st or not.

On Sunday (April 6), the Wayne Herald Ink Blots squared off against the State National Bank Money Men in an effort to raise money for the Wayne Fire Department. Fire equipment will be purchased with the funds raised.

As a tribute to the match-up, this is the story of what we think will be the outcome of the game, written to the score of "Casey at the Bat."

The outlook wasn't promising for the Money Men basketball players that day.

They were trailing the Wayne Herald Ink Blots by several points, they say.

Time was running down on the clock, which held the horrible fate of them losing to a team that could barely make it out the startling gate.

After watching the Ink Blots pass the ball and make the nets sizzle and burn, the Money Men were facing a shooting percentage of too little deposits and many returns.

But the Money Men were not about to fall — talented players were there to enhance their chances for them to come back.

It was time to make the figures balance.

Off the bench came the true veterans to make one last charge on the floor.

On came the heroes — Gross, Jordan (no not Michael) Wiser and Dave Ley. The crowd let out a roar.

The swift-footed Jordan passed off to Wiser, who fed the ball inside to Ley. Jordan flipped the basketball to Tim Koll who threw it in the bucket, to the Ink Blot's dismay. An Ink Blot inbound pass was picked off by Wiser and he arched a shot from out of the blue.

It went from out of his hands into the hoop, his form was questionable, but golly his shot was true.

A shot by an Ink Blot went off to the right and Ley went up for the rebound high.

he threw an outlet to Jordan who scored on a drive.

The Money Men needed only three points to tie.

As an Ink Blot maneuvered to half court, a Money Men player proved he was awake.

He swiped the ball for a clean steal and headed up court for a basket to make.

The ball went to Gross, who with fancy footwork leaped into the air and did a crazy spin.

An Ink Blot, faked out, fouled him in mid-air and could only watch as the basketball went in.

Gross went to the line, his veins were like ice as he sunk the free throw without even thinking twice.

Fifteen seconds remained in the game as the Ink Blot player was called for a walk.

Ley got the ball and passed to Jordan as only six seconds were left on the clock.

The ball went inside to Koll, back out to Gross who put up a shot, he missed but got hacked.

He went to the line with no time left.

His first shot missed and came back.

The weight on his shoulders fell, the basketball he kissed.

But oh how he felt so badly because his second charity foss he missed.

The game ended up tied, both teams were too tired to go count.

Both teams were in a battle and the player weariness began to mount.

But over in the Money Men camp there was no joy in the gym throughout.

They had a chance and blew it.

For the Mighty Money Men struck out.

news and notes

Mealtimes are teaching time. How does your family act during mealtimes? It's during these informal times that much of a child's basic learning takes place. Of all the ordinary, recurring events in the family's life, none is more important than the family meal. Children learn and form habits during mealtimes, such as habits of eating, speaking, sitting up and paying attention. They also learn qualities such as courteousness, appreciation, consideration and respect. The family meal also transmits the family's culture, traditions and customs. Since people tend to develop habits or act in the same manner from one meal to the next, so the parents' habits or patterns become ingrained in the child and are constantly reinforced. FOR EXAMPLE, IF the parent criticizes a neighbor at one meal, chances are this pattern will be repeated. The persons being criticized will change from meal to meal, but the act of criticizing will persist. The child will soon learn to criticize, because the parent, his important model, does it. The criticizing will become acceptable behavior and be reinforced because it is repeated at most meals. The same can be said of the habit of showing appreciation. If a parent expresses appreciation for the meal with a "thank you," the young child will learn that saying "thank you" is the acceptable and desirable thing to do. The mealtimes behavior of families differs a great deal. However, there are some common types. As you read these, think about your own family and what happens during your family meal. —REFUELING OR pit-stop meals. Characterized by little conversation other than "yeah," "gravy," "gotta go," "mustard," "yuck." These meals have much in common with the impersonal behavior one experiences in the morning at a roadside diner where the object is to eat in the least amount of time and then hit the road. —Cold or hot warfare meals. Characterized by cold shoulders and stares, purposely ignoring each other by opening hostile behavior spiced with cutting, nagging and abusive remarks directed at one or all the members. Squabbling is often the main dish served. —Dart-throwing meals. Characterized by the continual criticizing of others outside the family. Someone is talked about or put down at each meal. —Human interest meals. Members bring up and talk about interesting bits of information. The conversation may include world events, individual experiences and accomplishments, or disappointments; funny stories, news items, family activities, or future plans. The focus is on events, occurrences, issues and only on people from a positive viewpoint. —Ritual meals. Similar to the human interest meals but with the added feature that the meal has meaning or tradition about it. Certain rituals are performed that have meaning to the members, such as waiting until all are present before sitting down or beginning to eat. Food may be served in a special manner or a prayer offered. NOW THAT YOU have thought about your own mealtime, consider what the children are learning.

Your local merchant does more than just sell products

Helpful advice on getting the most from your purchase is another service provided by your local merchants. They are willing to take the time to explain proper ways to use and maintain the product so it will last longer and provide you with better service. And they stand behind everything they sell because they want you, the customer, to be completely satisfied.

When you shop locally, everyone benefits. It's more convenient so you save gas and time. You get friendly, knowledgeable service because local merchants "know" you and appreciate your business. They depend on you to keep their stores going strong. And some of what you spend goes back into the community in the form of taxes and charitable contributions paid by the merchants.

Remember...

Your money buys more when you shop at a local store. It's good for you, good for us, good for the community.

Kramer meets challenges: Wheelchair not an obstacle

By Linda Todd
WSC College Relations Intern
 He takes the steps outside his dormitory at Wayne State College one at a time, balancing on each edge before moving down to the next. At the bottom, he fills his wheelchair back in a 45-degree angle and rolls.
 "Mike Kramer, an 18-year-old freshman from Lexington, has trained his wheels well. They know what he wants them to do, and together they perform with amazing agility. Kramer has been paralyzed from the waist down since age four when his spinal cord was injured in a car accident. He is one of a handful of WSC students who use wheelchairs. Kramer lives in Pile Hall, with rooms accessible to handicapped students. Although there is a ramp at the front of Pile Hall along with the steps, Kramer doesn't always take the easy way.

 "I went to school right away," he said. "and the people accepted me the way I was. I was treated as average, but if I needed anything—they were there."

 Kramer said his two brothers grew up with him and his wheelchair. "If anybody picked on me," he said, "they took care of it."
 "THE WHEELCHAIR, according to Kramer, is not an obstacle on the basketball court or on the tennis court. "Instead of one bounce (in tennis)," he said, "you get two."
 He also spends time fishing and has a license to hunt from his car. "I've shot two deer so far," he said. "If I can't get there with my chair, I get out and crawl—I get where I have to go."

 This is Kramer's first semester at WSC. A human service counseling major, he plans to use his education to rehabilitate other people injured in car accidents.
 "I want to show them they can live after being hurt... show them you can go on living," he said.
 KRAMER IS ONE OF 188 disabled students with impaired mobility, hearing, speech, sight or learning abilities at Wayne State.

"In recent years, especially in recent months," said Dr. Bobby Lupack, director of the teaching learning center, "WSC has made a number of attempts to accommodate both the learning and physically disabled students within the collegiate structure."
 "As people who have successfully met special challenges," she said, "disabled students are able to teach all of us by their attitudes and examples."

Mike Kramer has met his challenges with undaunted determination. He cooks for himself and washes his own clothes.
 When he became old enough to drive, he installed the hand controls in his blue Chevrolet. "The chair only weighs 24 pounds," he said. "It pops apart and I throw it in the backseat."
 As extraordinary as his feat might seem to walking humans, Kramer said, "I'm just a person. I don't walk around, that's all."

Gifted Carroll schools

THE PRINCIPAL'S OFFICE

by Don Zeiss
Gifted Students
 What makes a gifted student different from an "average" student? According to a recent study by Youngstown State University (Ohio) professors:

- More gifted students had family rules about the amount of time they were allowed to watch television, and what kind of programs they could watch.
- More gifted students went to bed between 9 p.m. and 10 p.m. Most non-gifted students did not have a fixed bedtime on school nights, and tended to go to bed by 10 p.m. or later.

Children Having Children

Every day in America, 40 teenage girls give birth to their THIRD child. That sobering statistic is reported in a publication from the Institute for Educational Leadership, Inc., titled All One System, by Harold L. Hodgkinson. The book discusses the way social trends are affecting the schools.

The U.S. is experiencing what Hodgkinson calls an "epidemic" of the increase in the number of children born outside of marriage—50 percent of them to teenage mothers.

One part of the tragedy is that these "children of children" are often premature, due to lack of medical care and poor diet of the mothers. Prematurity in turn leads to low birth weight, which increases the chances the babies will suffer from major health problems and learning disabilities.

"This means," noted Hodgkinson, "that about 700,000 babies of the annual cohort of around 3.3 million births are almost assured of being either educationally retarded or 'difficult to teach.'"

Kids and Computers

Are children naturally fascinated with computers? No, according to a study at the University of California. Sixty-one percent of the children interviewed said they didn't like computers, and only 29 percent said they intended to use them when they became adults. (Education USA, 9/9/85)

NDE/ESU Math Science, Foreign Language Teacher Cadre Project

A project to identify and train science, math and foreign language teachers in new teaching techniques was started. The goal of the project is to create a state-wide network of outstanding K-12 teachers who can provide assistance in local schools. Nominations were made through schools in the Educational Service Units around the state.

Teachers selected will attend a one-week training institute in early June and will then serve as valuable Human Resource Teams for each ESU and the Nebraska State Department of Education.

Each ESU selected seven cadre members. Wayne High School is proud to have two teachers selected: Edith Zahniser, Foreign Language, and Judy Zobel, Physical Science.
