THE WAYNE HERALD

Coffey inauguration on Aug. 7

A ceremonious day is planned at Wayne State College of Nebraska Aug. 7 when the inauguration of Dr. Thomas A. Coffey — as the college's eighth president — will coincide with the college's summer commencement exercises at 10 a.m.

Coffey, who became Wayne State's chief executive in February, will give his perspective on the future of Wayne State College and his personal goals and objectives in his inauguration-commencement address.

Also during commencement, one of the college's highest awards — the Distinguished Service Award — will be given to Wayne State's seventh president, Dr. Ed Elliott. At 3 p.m. that day, the cornerstone will be laid in the college's soon-to-be-completed

Rice/Carlson Convocation and Recreation Center.

The inauguration of President Coffey and summer commencement have been combined in lieu of a formal inauguration at the president's request, said Dr. Randy Shaw, chairman of the Commencement/Inauguration Committee.

"Because of the current economic conditions in our state and the incumbent financial restraints on the state colleges of Nebraska, Dr. Coffey has asked that we not hold a formal inauguration," Shaw said.

"Rather, in response to his request, we will combine the inauguration ceremony with our summer commencement convocation."

The commencement/inauguration is scheduled for the college's outdoor amphitheater, the Willow Bowl. In case of inclement weather, the convocation will be in Rice Auditorium.

Coffey, 50, came to Wayne State from a similar position at Thomas More College in Crestview Hills, Kentucky, a suburb of Cincinnati. He served the 1,300-student, private liberal arts college for over three years.

Coffey and his wife, Maureen, have three children: Katie, a recent graduate of the College of St. Catherine in St. Paul, Minnesota; Mary, who will be a freshman this fall at Cornell College in Mt. Vernon, Iowa; and Patrick, who will be a senior this fall at Wayne High School.

ED ELLIOTT worked in numerous administrative positions in his 14 years at Wayne State before becoming president in 1982. He left Wayne State last summer to assume the presidency of Central Missouri State University in Warrensburg.

The prestigious Distinguished Service Award has been given to only 26 other people associated with Wayne State. It is held in high regard that the Board of Trustees of the Nebraska State Colleges must give its approval before it is awarded.

Four men will take part in the cornerstone ceremony — Elliott; J. Alan Cramer of Wayne, former chairman of the Board of Trustees; President Coffey; and Thomas Morrissey of Tecumseh, current chairman of the Board of Trustees.

New doctor in Wayne

by Chuck Hackenmilller

Twenty-eight year old Benjamin Martin, M.D., will begin family practice Monday at the Benhack Clinic in Wayne.

He is originally from Pender, Nebraska. His father, Dr. Ben Martin, currently practices in Pender.

He graduated from Pender High School in 1976 and had attended the University of Nebraska-Omaha and the University of Nebraska College of Medicine. He graduated from medical school in 1983.

From there, he went to Sioux City, Iowa and fulfilled his family practice residency program, complete the program on June 26, 1986.

Martin said Wayne was in the back of his mind since high school as to the place where he would like to practice medicine. "This is a nice place and I like northeast Nebraska," he mentioned.

Martin and his wife, Donna, have three children: Ryan, age 9; Lindsey, age 5; and Andrew, 21 months.

His hobbies include most types of athletics, including running, water skiing, snow skiing and golf.

For about eight weeks last year, Martin said he had worked exclusively with the Benhack Clinic and Dr. Benhack.

"The people I had met then were very cordial," he said.

Public cooperation great

Peak alerts continue in Wayne

Temperatures have been sizzling these past few days and the Wayne public address system has been getting a workout.

An emergency electrical peak alert, broadcasted over the public address system, has sounded almost daily this past week as average temperature during the days averaged from 95 to 100 degrees. Wayne City Administrator Phil Kloster's voice over the public address system has been requesting city residents and businesses to cut down on their use of electricity and turn up the thermostats of their air conditioners another eight degrees — all in an effort to hold the line on the city's peak load.

"By doing so, city officials say, will save the city thousands of dollars. Some say the savings could be up to $100,000 annually if the peak load does not rise to a substantial amount. The total city kilowatt load is constantly being monitored at the city light plant, according to Gene Hansen, superintendent at the light plant.

"If the kilowatt load progresses to a kilowatt load of 7800, then we start initiating the peak energy alert," Hansen said.

"So far, we have been able to keep the demand at around a 8,000 kilowatt load," he mentioned.

Without the peak alert over the emergency days and the cooperation of people conserving electrical energy, the kilowatt peak load could have easily built up to 9,000 kilowatts, he said.

THE CITY GETS a bill at the end of each month from Nebraska Public Power District based on the demand load which the city has set on a particular day in which the demand load was high. That rate is applied to the city's monthly billing for 12 months.

So if the kilowatts had reached the 9,000 mark on these hot days, then the city of Wayne would be paying a rate for that amount of peak kilowatts during the next 12 months. That would cost the city substantially more in obtaining the power from NPPD than it would have played at the current 8,000 kilowatt mark.

NPPD must provide the highest maximum power available to the city of Wayne and that maximum, if emergency measures were not taken to cut the usage, would need to produce the 9,000 kilowatts.

"Just on those few days, we can save lots and lots of money," Hansen mentioned.

"You can tell the people in your story that they are doing a great job [in cutting energy usage during peak alerts]. Without them cooperating, we'd be up a creek," Hansen said.

CURRENTLY, residence are exercising the option of voluntarily cooperating to reduce their power consumption in the city.

Another alternative discussed as a means for possible future use is to use automation, a technique that would automatically cut power usage without causing great discomfort to residents consuming the power, according to Hansen.

Prolonged high temperatures on a daily basis, such as this area has experienced recently, has a tendency to drive the peak load up faster and let it hang at the peak longer. Normally on a hot day, the peak load would start subsiding at about 5:30 p.m.

Hot days take toll on pets

Most human beings should know better than to over exercise or work in hot, humid conditions without taking proper precautions.

However, pets and livestock need help to prevent heat stroke and other sickness attributed to hot and sticky summer weather, according to Dr. Jay Liska of the Wayne Veterinary Clinic.

He lists the following animal precautions against heat stroke:

• If it is imperative to have a clear, fresh and abundant supply of drinking water for the livestock or pet.

• Pet owners should be careful not to lock their pet inside a car while they go shopping or other places. This action would be considered a source of heat stroke to the animal.

• Make sure the animals have shade to rest in, especially when there is no air movement whatsoever.

• If you must exercise your pet, let it be in the cool of the morning and in the evening hours rather than the hottest time of the day.

• If the animal has long hair, give them a haircut. This would be way to get rid of gnats or other fleas which the animal must sometimes endure. If you can't give the haircut, provide the dog with a daily brushing to get rid of dead hair or hair that is matted to the skin.

• Many of the same hints also apply to livestock — provide them shade and plenty of water.

NASA official says future at standstill

While Angelo A. Casaburri of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration was at Wayne State College of Nebraska July 14 and 15, someone asked him what his lecture presentation was about. After naming several topics ranging from astronaut food to astronomy, he simply said, "In other words, covering NASA."

Casaburri, an aerospace education specialist, visited WSC as part of the college's annual aerospace workshop.

Standing amidst a sea of model rockets and other miniature aircraft, Casaburri spoke to the class and gave numerous demonstrations as well.

"My favorite one deals with weightlessness," said Casaburri. "I ask the students 'how many feel you can be weightless on earth?' Then I take a burning candle and make it weightless by putting it in a state of freefall. And since hot air doesn't rise and cold air doesn't sink, the carbon dioxide builds up around the flame and extinguishes it. I think that really gets across to the students."

In another demonstration, Casaburri uses a blow torch on a piece of tile no heavier than styrofoam. The tile is similar to that used as a heat shield in a spacecraft to prevent it from burning up when it re-enters the atmosphere.

CASABURRI, who has been called the "Asphalt Astronaut," represents the Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas, and covers mostly eight central states. He is one of the 30 specialists who tour the country and deal with some one million students during the school year.

The annual Wayne State aerospace workshop, which began in the mid '60s, is designed mainly for elementary and secondary teachers.

"When NASA was established, a provision was made that it must publicize to America what it's doing," said Casaburri.

Along with the models and other materials, Casaburri also displays some moon rocks. "The oldest ones we have are about 2.6 billion years old. They haven't been touched by atmosphere or water."

Casaburri's props sometimes put him in humorous situations. "Take a space suit into a laundry mat with you sometime and see how many stares you get," he quipped.

HIS JOB ISN'T always fun and games, however. "No more evident was this than in his first presentation after the Challenger disaster Jan. 28. 'I felt like I lost seven good friends,' said Casaburri. 'I worked with the commander, Dick Scobee. He was always willing to speak at seminars and show film clips of his missions.'

"I never had the opportunity to work with Christa McAuliffe," he continued. "She was to do the ultimate field trip, taking you around the shuttle during the mission. I'm sure that in my travels we would have met, and as far as I know the Teacher in Space program is still on."

IN A SPEECH after the Challenger explosion, President Reagan said of space travel, "The future belongs to the brave, not the fainthearted," Casaburri seemingly took this attitude after that.

"I took a deep breath and slowly counted to 10," he said. "It was hard to pick up the Challenger model in a lecture for awhile. My job then ceased to be fun. Before that I was a grown man playing with his toys."

There was some confusion in that first lecture after the Challenger tragedy. "A few teachers thought I'd come to school to deliver a eulogy and some refused to attend," said Casaburri. "A lot asked questions, but my hands were tied on the matter."

Said Casaburri, "The future, however, is kind of at a standstill. We've got a fleet of three that's grounded and it's uncertain whether or not the fourth will be replaced. We're looking at $1.6 billion to replace it and two years for construction."

"There's three space probes that should have been launched two months ago," he continued. "An orbiter and atmospheric probe to Jupiter, an orbiter to Venus and one to the sun. There's also one scheduled for Mars in the 1990's."

Support for abuse victims organized

Women who were sexually molested as children will have the opportunity to share their experiences in a support group beginning July 31 at 5:30-7 p.m. in the Monroe Mental Health Center, Norfolk.

Dr. Barbara Sturgis, clinical psychologist, and Kate Lear, therapist, will meet with the group on a weekly basis. Dr. Sturgis said the confidential sessions will involve "the sharing of experiences for those who have not had a chance to fully deal with the issue."

Many of the victims, according to Dr. Sturgis, feel isolation, guilt and responsibility for the molestation. "It can affect relationships," she said. "The group will help these individuals deal with the molestation in a supportive environment."

Although this will be the first time a support group for victims of sexual abuse has been offered, Dr. Sturgis said, "this is a much more common problem than we realized." She said 50 percent of her case load is related to sexual abuse. Women may join the group at any time, however, Dr. Sturgis said a maximum of 12 individuals will be able to participate. No fee will be charged and babysitting will be provided.

For more information or to register for the group, interested individuals may contact the Monroe Mental Health Center at 371-7530 or 1-800-672-8323.

Funding for the support group has been provided by the Northeast Nebraska Victims Assistance Program.

Doug Henning to appear at state fair

Doug Henning's "New Evening of Magic and Wonder" will now take first spot on Friday, Aug. 29, in the Nebraska State Fair's concert lineup this year, according to manager Henry Brandt.

"A conflict in Copperfield's schedule has made it impossible for him to be in Lincoln for the fair," Brandt stated. "We were very pleased to be able to replace him with Doug Henning," he added, "because, even though the two magicians have different styles, they're both excellent illusionists, and we feel sure that people who were looking forward to the Copperfield show will be equally excited about Henning's performance."

Henning, the star of three Broadway shows and eight network television specials, is especially enthusiastic about his New Evening of Magic and Wonder. "We've created over a dozen original illusions for this tour which we're presenting for the first time," Henning explained. In addition to some favorite illusions from Broadway or television, he's developed new mysteries which include a Japanese origami box and a levitation inspired by the feats of ancient Indian masters.

According to State Fair manager Henry Brandt, tickets already issued for the Copperfield performance will be honored for Henning's show with the same seat assignments. Any ticket requests received for the Copperfield show which have not yet been filled with receive Henning tickets. All future requests received will also be filled with Henning tickets.

Wacken away

by chuck hackenmiller

It mystified me at first. Then it brought back memories. And then it made me laugh.

Weeks ago my wife was mentioning that our son's hair on his head could be used to dust the furniture — it was that long.

"Make an appointment. Get him to a barber," she mentioned.

Like any normal husband who gets these types of orders from his wife, he procrastinates, with the appointment-making for several weeks.

One day after work I came home and walked in the living room. Frankly, I ran to the kitchen and said: "Now don't get worried, dear. But there's a strange little girl in the living room with long hair watching cartoons."

"That's your son!" she replied sternly.

The appointment for a haircut was made first thing the next morning.

Well, the first thing that little lad says when he gets in that barber chair is: "I want a buzz!"

Here's where I was mystified.

"Buzz" in my dictionary, is defined as a low, vibrating, humming sound; a rumor or report; a telephone call. In slang, it means to go or to leave.

But the barber informs me that a "buzz" is a popular hairstyle these days. What it is, he said, is hair shortly cropped to the skin. If you pictured it like I did, the "buzz" leaves the hair on the head feeling like steel wool.

IT CAME BACK to me — all those Wayne boys with those short haircuts that played on the high school football team. Maybe that is when the craze started. It keeps the head cool in the summer and it's the thing to have right now.

The military may have another word for it. Like head shave or something of that nature.

But when I was growing up on the farm, we called those types of haircuts "butch" (abbreviated terminology for butcher).

Mom was the barber then. She ordered this electric haircut kit, perhaps from a mail-order catalog, and for many years she wrapped an old towel around my chin and chest as I sat on a stool or dining room chair and she cropped a good head of hay off my head.

She never asked me: "How do you want it cut? Should I leave a lot or a little in the front? How do you want the back to look?"

She just clipped away.

And when the haircut was completed, she never passed a mirror before my face and asked for my approval. She just said, "Next!" and in the chair would pop one of my younger brothers.

IF ALL THE OTHER guys my age had the same haircut, perhaps I wouldn't have minded. After all, it was cool for doing those farm chores on hot summer evenings.

But when they would rush their fingers through their hair and mockingly call me "bristlehead," I'd get upset.

Oh, I never blamed mom for it. She was trying to make do with what we had on the farm and didn't really have the technical know-how about how to style hair and such.

And with ten children, mom just didn't have the time to run the kids into town whenever one of us needed a haircut.

Later, as I grew older, it got to be that gaining "butch" haircuts was a method of discipline. Anytime something I did was wrong enough to require some sort of punishment, my parents would "spare the rod and spoil my hair."

Yep — I'd get one of those butch haircuts.

I'd swear that while growing up, my hair started out straight and after getting a butch, the skin got too much air on top and developed natural curls.

So I had to chuckle a bit when my son said he wanted to get a buzz.

But I didn't let him get one. When it comes to tops of heads, thin is not necessarily "in" at our house.

Computer network can lead to finding grain storage place

Representative Doug Bereuter, in working with University of Nebraska-Lincoln personnel and the AGNET agriculture computer network, has come up with a plan to help solve some of the grain storage problems Grain Belt producers are facing.

Bereuter announced at a Friday morning news conference that, at his suggestion, AGNET has developed a program that can bring producers in dire need of storage together with producers or elevators that have some extra space to store grain. The First District Representative explained that he came up with the idea after visiting with Nebraska farmers about grain storage problems while traveling around the District during the past two weeks.

"At the present time, it is entirely possible for a farmer who needs storage facilities to live near a producer or elevator that has some available storage space — and not know it," Bereuter said. "In the situation that we face today, we can't afford to have unused storage."

Bereuter said he got in touch with Dr. James Kendrick, professor of agricultural marketing at UN-L.

Kendrick, within a week, developed a program for the AGNET computer network.

AGNET IS A computer network that has been providing information services to agricultural producers through county ASCS offices for years. The new program, STORAGELIST, is designed to bring together producers and storage facilities.

The program allows those with available storage to list that information on a "sellers" list.

Producers in need of storage can then search the list by state and county, type of storage (for example metal bin, flat storage or upright silo), and aeration method. The person listing the storage space can also include comments, such as amount of storage available, rent, time of day to call and other information.

A producer using STORAGELIST gets a list of names, addresses and phone numbers for available storage that fits his specifications. The AGNET people anticipate that most of the listings will be for on-farm storage.

That situation makes a program like STORAGELIST especially helpful, because locating available on-farm storage without it could be difficult.

BEREUTER SAID a farmer in need of storage, living in one part of a county, will be able to seek potential, unused or partially filled grain storage facilities located in the same or adjacent counties near that farmer.

"By using STORAGELIST, a producer can cut down on the amount of time and guesswork in locating available storage," he said.

"While I will continue to do what I can in Washington to move this grain out of the Midwest and into the export market, I am optimistic that this new AGNET program will help to alleviate some of our immediate storage problems," he said.

"It is my hope that agriculture and commodity groups, grain cooperatives, bankers and the extension service will promote STORAGELIST. It might not solve all of the storage problems, but it will at least provide some temporary relief for farmers in search of a place to store their grain."

To the point

Information from the Tri-County Council of Governments in Hartington, Nebraska, reveals that high tech-firms can be attracted to the rural areas.

Results from a recent study have indicated that there are actions that can be taken to bring on high technology firms.

Those factors that are listed by firms as absolutely essential include:

- Clean physical environment.
- Availability of technical personnel.
- Absence of drug/alcohol problems in the community.
- Quality public school system.
- Low traffic congestion.
- Knowledgeable bankers friendly to technology-based firms.
- Positive policies and attitudes of local government toward industry.
- Medical services and facilities.
- One-day package service from UPS and Federal Express.
- Housing for management.
- Nearby airport for passenger service or private planes.
- Opportunities for consultation with university people.
- Minimum electric power interruptions and shortages.
- And sophisticated local telephone service.

The following infrastructure factors associated with an industrial location were listed with less importance:

- Industrial sites for lease.
- Average wage levels.
- Long distance trucking or rail service.
- Vocational training facilities.
- Waste disposal arrangements.
- Water system capacity.
- Public transportation.
- And private schools.

The Nebraska Department of Revenue has recently released its 1984 (that's right, 1984) annual report.

In looking at a previous report in 1983, it reveals that sales tax receipts were down in all of the communities in our coverage area during 1984.

In Allen, an approximate $16,100 decrease was recorded; Wakefield, a slip of $29,290; Beldon, $4,230 less; Laurel, $53,400 dip; Winside, $11,600 less; and Wayne, about $234,000 decrease when looking at sales tax gained.

Oct. 1 has been designated as the deadline for submission of an application to the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission — Land and Water Conservation Fund.

Eligible local participants may include cities or villages, counties, school districts and others.

The development projects may include the following examples: ballfields, tennis courts, playground equipment, fencing, restrooms, landscaping, lighting, hunting/fishing nature areas and other outdoor recreation.

Applications may be submitted at any time of forms provided by the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission.

In light of the heat this area has been experiencing the past few days, it would be easy to disregard the peak energy alerts that are broadcast over the public address system. City officials say, however, that allowing our electrical power usage to peak at great amounts could cost individuals more dollars in rate paying in the future.

The response has been great so far. Electrical power usage has been held down, thanks in part to individuals who can go a little longer in the day without heavy use of the air conditioner, or held off until evening to use their appliances after the emergency peak alert has been cancelled.

Keep up the good work, city officials are saying.

World Bank's actions will concern U.S. agriculture

by Cheryl Stubbendieck, vice president/information

Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation Add the World Bank to the lengthening list of things farmers and ranchers need to be concerned about.

Until it recently proposed to lend $500 million to Brazil to help that country make its agricultural system more efficient, the World Bank had a pretty low profile outside of Washington.

The bank was created following World War II to finance economic development around the world. The U.S. provides about 20 percent of the bank's capital stocks — which makes it the largest voting member — and other industrialized nations provide the remainder. The bank makes loans for specific projects. The current administration determines if the U.S. will support or oppose specific loans, and to the extent possible, it tries to pressure the World Bank to loan in U.S. interests.

Although organizations such as Farm Bureau have been concerned about the World Bank's lending policies for some time, it was the proposed $500 million loan to Brazil that raised the red flag high. Typically, the World Bank announced the proposed loan about three days before its members were to vote on it, meaning interested parties had little time to get more information about it.

What U.S. farmers — and the world — do not need now is more of the commodities that already are in oversupply. Thus Farm Bureau and other farm and commodity organizations were concerned that this loan would encourage Brazilian production, in competition with U.S. production, at a time when world over-supplies are in large part responsible for low U.S. farm prices.

IT IS ONE THING to give assistance to an underdeveloped nation so that it can feed its people and develop its agriculture to the point that it someday becomes a viable commercial trading partner, such as the U.S. seeks to do under the P.L. 480 program. But it is quite another to give assistance to an aggressive trading competitor.

Consider the current state of U.S.-Brazilian trade. Brazil has announced it will not make concessions to the U.S. to liberalize imports of micro- and mini-computers, despite possible retaliation by the U.S. against those import restrictions. It currently enjoys a trade surplus with the U.S. of $5 billion.

UNDER PRESSURE from the farm organizations, the World Bank delayed the vote on the Brazilian loan three days and supplied these details:

a total of $400 million would be used by Brazil to finance imports, including ag imports, to offset losses from exchange rate fluctuations and to pay for imports needed because of the Brazilian drought; the remainder would be used for storage for the domestic market and miscellaneous domestic uses. In return, Brazil is to reduce government intervention in trade and domestic pricing policies, which would in theory allow a freer flow of imports and reduce government price supports.

So it appears the loan to Brazil — which passed with the U.S. voting in favor — is not the threat to American agricultural producers as first appeared, but neither is it squeaky clean; whether Brazil will keep its half of the bargain remains to be seen over a period of years.

Three things are clear from the Brazilian case: the U.S. must continue to oppose any economic development loans aimed at increasing foreign production of commodities currently in world surplus; the World Bank must be less secretive about its proposals and allow more time for study before voting; and safeguards are needed to see that the conditions attached to a specific loan are in fact adhered to.

Build stronger families this summer

Summer is a good season for building strong families. It's a great season for parents and grandparents to be outside, and it's a good time for children to enjoy summer fun, playing in the water and riding bicycles. The season brings grandparents and grandchildren together for picnics, ball games and walks through the neighborhood. The involvement of grandparents, who may have more leisure time than parents, can be an ideal catalyst for strengthening family relationships.

HERE ARE SOME suggestions for using the pleasantness of the summer season.

- Learn about nature, trees, flowers and the special joys of each changing season.
- Talk about summer experiences and plan family times together.
- Appreciate family by keeping a record of special family events.
- Make a personal and family article that will be treasured, such as nature collections, picture books, art work, poems and other items for the home.
- Take your children to the library. Find out your child's special interest. A book on that topic could lead to building an object or collecting subjects that could stretch to summer-long activities.
- Encourage your child to check out working for a neighbor. Many people take vacations and need someone to mow the yard or weed the garden. A young person with time to kill can be of great help.
- A young person can do some jobs around his own home. Children need to learn basic skills and it is responsible to expect a son or daughter to help with some of the everyday jobs like window washing, cleaning or even cooking.

GRANDPARENTS CAN bridge the gap between the past and the present, sharing a philosophy of life that has been developed over the years. They can promote love, caring and sharing.

These experiences help grandchildren, in some of their most formative years, to develop a healthy attitude about life, nature, family and old age. Most of all, the children will develop a good attitude about themselves because they really feel loved and important. They will learn to appreciate the summer as beautiful and real. And they will look forward to the changes in life and being a grandparent someday.

Emerson games cancelled

Sherman blast lifts Wayne

Wayne head coach Hank Overin calls Brian Sherman the most improved player on the Midget baseball team since the beginning of the season. And Tuesday night, Sherman showed why.

After Jess Zeiss stroked a one-out single and Scott Hammer followed by drawing a walk in the bottom of the eighth, the left-handed hitting Sherman stroked a clutch triple to left field to plate Zeiss with the game-winning run which allowed Wayne a 6-5 victory over Madison.

"Since the beginning of the season, Sherman has really made a lot of progress," Overin said. "He took that pitch and went the other way with it. It was a nice piece of hitting."

Tom Baier did some nice hitting of his own in the first inning. After Zeiss, Hammer and Sherman all drew two-out walks, Baier ripped a two-run triple to supply Wayne with a 3-0 lead. Zeiss scored earlier on a wild pitch.

Madison pulled within two by tallying a run in the second inning, but Wayne increased its lead to four with a pair of runs in the second.

Corey Frye and Kevin Hausmann started the second by drawing consecutive walks, then both scored on two force plays on grounders by Jeff Luft and Zeiss.

Wayne continued to threaten throughout the game, but didn't score again until the eighth. However, Madison clipped away at the hosts' lead and after scoring one in each of the third and fourth innings, made the score 5-4 with another marker in the fifth.

Madison then used a walk, double and single to tie the game in the top of the seventh and retired Wayne in the bottom of the frame to force extra innings.

Luft, who came in relief of Hammer in the fourth inning, recorded three quick outs around a walk in the top of the eighth before Sherman drove home Zeiss with the game-winning.

Luft inherited bases loaded jam in the fourth, but got the first batter he faced to hit into an inning ending double play to thwart the Madison uprising.

Sherman also doubled in the third to finish 2-for-4 at the plate, and Zeiss, who has hit consistently well all season, also finished 2-for-4.

Luft, Baier and Jason Wood all added one hit apiece for Wayne.

Madison finished with five hits off Hammer and Luft. The pitching duo finished with nine strike outs against 10 walks.

Wayne's Midgets and Juniors were supposed to play Emerson Friday night at Overin Field, but the games have been cancelled.

See MIDGETS page 7.

Junior Olympics will be held July 23-27 at Lincoln

LINCOLN — Will Allen's Jyoti Kwankin become a scholarship collegiate athlete or even an Olympic medalist some day? Hard to say, but Mark Kostek, meet director of the 20th annual National Junior Olympics Track and Field Championships, says Kwankin has a good chance because he qualified for the championships which will be held here at Ed Weir Track July 23 through July 27.

"I'm excited about the Junior Olympics. Other countries look at it to see how well (USA) be in the years to come. This is the national meet to be in the United States. If they (the competitors) get to this level of competition, they have a good shot of becoming scholarship collegiate athletes or even Olympic medalists," Kostek said.

Kostek added that Carl Lewis and the Huskers' Angela Thacker competed in the Junior Olympics held in Lincoln and went on to perform well in the Olympics. Lewis won four medals at the 1984 Olympic games, while Thacker, who will be a senior at NU this fall, finished fourth in the long jump at the 1984 Olympics.

Athletes from nine to 17 years-old will compete at the meet. This will be the seventh time NU has hosted the championships, but the first time since 1982.

Kostek said he expects many talented athletes to compete in the meet.

"We anticipate the largest field in the history of the meet, possibly 4,000 athletes," he said.

Tickets for the Junior Olympics may be purchased at the gate or in Endangered birds being threatened

LINCOLN — People involved in recreational activities along certain portions of four Nebraska rivers may unintentionally be harassing and injuring or killing two species of endangered and threatened bird species, according to Game and Parks Commission Non-Game Wildlife Specialist Ross Lock.

He says both the Least Tern and the Piping Plover nest in colonies on dry, bare sand found in the channel beds and on certain sand and gravel mining pits located immediately adjacent to rivers. Unfortunately, these same spots are likely to be favored by waders, fishermen and drivers of all terrain vehicles. Because the eggs and young birds are colored to blend with the sand, people can disrupt the area, and even injure or kill the birds unintentionally.

To make people aware of the nesting colony locations, some nesting areas along the Platte River have been posted with signs prohibiting human intrusion, or marked with small flats so they can be recognized.

"The birds are currently nesting at some 20 sites scattered along the Platte River between Lexington and Plattsmouth, one site near Gothenburg; on the Niobrara River from about Springview to Niobrara; and on the Missouri River from Yankton to Ponca, and from Niobrara to Pickstown, S.D. There are also a few nesting on the Loup River just above Columbus," Lock said.

The colonies usually consist of from two to 20 pairs of nesting birds and are scattered within an area of less than one acre. Sometimes adult birds fake injury and dive-bomb intruders in the area in attempts to drive them away. To most people, Least Terns and Piping Plovers resemble the more common Killdeer.

Intruders into a nesting area can cause a number of negative things to occur. Because the adults will leave their nests to flee or to attempt to drive intruders away, delicate eggs normally shielded from the sun by adult birds are exposed to hot and lethal sun rays. Nests can be permanently abandoned by the adults, and eggs and young birds can be crushed by people walking or driving vehicles through the area.

Lock urges recreationists to keep an eye open for the presence of birds on sandbars and at sand gravel pits and to avoid those areas. "By keeping away from nesting sites, people will not only be helping the birds, they will also avoid being prosecuted for harassing or taking a species prohibited by State and Federal Endangered Species Laws," according to Lock.

Actually, avoiding nesting sites will not prohibit or significantly restrict use of Nebraska's rivers by recreational enthusiasts. Lock says nesting terns and plovers occupy less than one-sixteenth of one percent of the area available for recreational use along the state's river systems. "There is plenty of room for people to recreate without disturbing the birds. Past bird and human conflicts have resulted primarily because people either did not realize their activities were causing a problem, or were not even aware of the bird's presence," he said. "Though there have also been many problems created by all-terrain vehicles trespassing on private property."
