THE WAYNE HERALD

Booked up this semester

Wellness program grows popular

Editor's Note: The Wayne Herald has covered the senior wellness program since its initiation in 1984. This article on the successful program was written by Barry Dahlkoetter of the WSC College Relations Office.

Age is a quality of body and mind; if you lift your own dreams and hopes for mankind, if you possess the zest for life in peace or strife, if your flames of movement and enthusiasm are alive — not dead, then you are not old, but young instead.

Frank Sinatra once crooned the line, "Don't you know that it's worth, every treasure on Earth, to be young at heart?" And on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings at Wayne State College, Ol' Blue Eyes' song would have fit right in.

The main activity in Rice Auditorium these mornings involves the Wayne State College Senior Wellness Program — a group of senior citizens who congregate to exercise and promote the quality of life, physically as well as socially.

The wellness program began at Wayne State during the winter of 1984 by Dr. Ralph Barclay, professor of Health and Physical Education.

"When you're old, and if you're retired, it's important that you have something to do," said Dr. Barclay. "People in our program get a new view of life and they have something to live for."

Since its inception, Dr. Barclay's brainchild has grown from a mere six members to 111. There is no charge for the program, but each participant must be 50 years of age and undergo a physical examination beforehand. Those with severe health problems, such as heart attack and stroke victims, are also welcome. (The program is filled this semester, but Dr. Barclay says those interested in joining next fall should contact him prior to the start of the semester).

EVEN THOUGH the hour-long class doesn't start until 9 a.m., Dr. Barclay says many participants arrive by 8:30 and walk around the gym for half an hour.

"It can create a helluva parking problem with all those people," he said. Yet, it's one problem he seemingly doesn't mind. "People say, 'Why don't you charge something for this?' But the college is good enough to let us use the facilities and I don't want to tamper with success. Maybe the participants feel it's not worth it if you don't charge them."

Exercise is emphasized, but Dr. Barclay says there is much more to the program than just being fit. "Physical fitness is more of an outcome than a goal," he said.

THE FIVE COMMON dimensions of wellness — nutritional awareness, physical fitness, stress awareness and management, intellectual awareness, and social awareness — are emphasized. Social interaction ranges from physical activities in class to having coffee afterward.

Some of the activities Dr. Barclay uses in the program are balance work, flexibility work, walking/jogging, aerobics, aquazincing, dance, social games, weight training, swimming and mini-lectures.

"We don't like to lecture a lot," he said. "For example, we'll give them handouts on nutrition and calorie intake and maybe talk for five minutes. We're very flexible here and encourage interaction."

The "we" Barclay refers to are his assistants. Last semester, they include Missy Munter, a 1972 Wayne State graduate residing in Coleridge, Nebraska, and two students, Meg Hurley, a sophomore from Omaha, and Missy Stollenberg, a senior from Wayne. Some assistants help for credit and others do it for enjoyment.

FOR MUNTER, the wellness program serves a double purpose. She's doing something she enjoys and receives training and information for the senior citizens center she operates in Coleridge.

"I wanted to start an exercise program back home," she said, "but I needed some more information. I talked with Ralph and he asked me if I'd like to work in his program."

"These people are experiencing a social well-being," Munter continued. "They work together, communicate and feel good after their exercises. It's rewarding for both myself as well as them."

Four students are working with the program this semester: Susie Heutlisch, Lawton, Iowa; Jim Harms, Bellevue, Nebraska; Michele Nielsen of Orchard, Nebraska; and Karlene Wastlager of Wayne.

Barclay stressed the informality and flexibility of the program and its activities. "On any day there might be 20 to 30 people in each of two gyms, the pool, and the aerobic dance group, plus another seven or eight in the weight room. They don't have to take part in all the activities, only the ones they wish to."

Harold Maciejewski, a participant and former physical education teacher and coach at Wayne High School, heard about the wellness program and decided to join. Being a former P.E. teacher, it was something he could relate to.

"It's nice to go to an exercise program and be able to do what you want," he said. "I want to get into the aerobic dancing, but I think square dancing is more invigorating. It's quick, lively, helps you with timing and balance and gets your heart rate up. I'm meeting a lot of people, too."

"From being a P.E. teacher, I sometimes get the urge to help," added Maciejewski, "but then I realize that I'm a student again."

Fire call

THE WAYNE Fire Department was called to a fire Saturday morning four miles west and three miles south of Wayne at the Theophilus Church site. Workmen were burning rubble near the torn down parsonage when the flames got out of control. Dry conditions are making open burning dangerous, according to Fire Chief Dale Preston.

For Dixon County

Fair dates set

The dates and entertainment lineup have been established for the 1987 Dixon County Fair.

The Dixon County Agricultural Society has set Aug. 11-13 as the fair dates, with the traditional Vesper Service on Sunday, Aug. 9.

Among the entertainment for this year will be Magician Gary Roberts; Stimpkin the Fool, a minstrel, storyteller, magician and reveler; and the return of the Martin Family, who appeared last year at the traditional tree barbecue.

Watson Amusements of Waco, Texas will provide the midway. The group is expected to be one of the bigger and better carnivals at the fair in recent years, said Fair Board Secretary Norman Meyer.

President of the fair board is Ross Armstrong of Ponca. Vice President is Verdel, Erwin of Concord, treasurer is Elray Hank of Wakefield.

Area directors include A.D. "Pete" Brown, Paul Fischer, Willis Kohl and Lloyd Roeder, all of Wakefield; Courtland Roberts, Fredrick Kraemer and Duane Koester of Allen; W.E. Hanson of Concord; and Harold George of Dixon.

College cuts discussed

Dr. Thomas A. Coffey, president of Wayne State College, will appear on the show "Invitation," Feb. 10 at 6 p.m. on KWSC-TV Channel 18 in Wayne.

"Invitation" is a current events program dealing with northeast Nebraska, hosted by Bryan Gahagan. Dr. Coffey will be talking about budget cuts affecting Wayne State College the next two years and the measures to deal with these reductions in the college budget.

Martinsburg school district reorganizing proposed

A petition that shows unanimous approval for the dissolving of the Martinsburg K-6 public school district, in Dixon County, will be considered by the State Committee for School District Reorganization.

And, pending the outcome of the final hearing in May of the dissolution request, the Allen Public School District could be welcoming several of the students who previously attended school at Martinsburg.

The Dixon County Committee for School District Reorganization approved the dissolution at a Jan. 15 meeting. The dissolution proposal will now be sent to the State Committee for School District Reorganization in Lincoln for review on Feb. 24.

Petition signers had indicated a preference for their children to attend either Ponca or Allen school districts.

"We would get [in land evaluation and additional tax revenue] about what Ponca would get," said John Werner, superintendent of Allen School District.

"But the decision is not final yet. Up until May they can switch back and forth [from whatever school preference those in the Martinsburg school district had chosen earlier]," he added.

It is uncertain, he said, how many of the students from the Martinsburg school district would be transferring into Allen.

However, Werner said he does not anticipate any problems with the added enrollment. "No extra staff will be needed. We look forward to serving them," he said.

No problems would be anticipated in transporting the students to Allen. "We have a bus route that goes right through there now," Werner mentioned.

The Martinsburg school district has approximately $4 million in assessed valuation and 15 students in grades K-6. Currently, there are students at Allen from within the Martinsburg school district who are at the eighth grade and high school level.

CAMERAMEN AND sound crew attended last year's Wayne Chicken Show to film a promotional segment for John Deere Days.

To show at John Deere Day

Chicken Show on film

If the word about the annual Wayne Chicken Show hasn't spread through 1986's national recognition on the Johnny Carson Show, then perhaps five million people will become aware of the annual event thanks to an upcoming John Deere promotional film.

During last July's Chicken Show, a film crew working with the John Deere promotional film had recorded the many events during the celebration.

In one of the events (the chicken flying contest), one of the chickens landed on the lens of one of the film crew member's camera — that's how close they were to the action.

Well, John Deere Day '87 is scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 12 at Logan Valley Implement in Wayne. And one of the highlights of the day will be the showing of the John Deere promotional film which features the Chicken Show events.

PICK SAID the segment on the Wayne Chicken Show is about five minutes in length and it features such events as the egg drop contest, chicken flying contest and the National Cluck-off contest.

In addition to showing the film at Logan Valley, Pick anticipates that the film will be shown to approximately 5,000 other dealerships across the nation and into Canada and Mexico.

The films will be shown continuously during John Deere Days '87 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Also during the open house, Pick said there will be a variety of door prizes given away. Anyone is welcome to attend the event.

"It's a good opportunity to mix with neighbors, discuss farming and see the newest John Deere equipment," mentioned Pick.

And you can see some people imitating a chicken by strutting and flapping wings, crowing, clucking and scratching in the dirt — competition that is fun for the participants and the spectators.

Letters bring results

Statehouse Correspondent The Nebraska Press Association Sen. Donald Wesley isn't sure he wants the honor.

The Lincoln senator, with eight years under his legislative belt, has his name on the most bills. He introduced or helped sponsor 68 pieces of legislation.

"This is an honor I didn't seek and I don't cherish," Wesley said after the unofficial tally indicated that he was the most prolific introducer among the 49 senators.

Wesley's deluge includes everything from statewide economic development bills to parochial Lincoln issues. And Wesley, who heads the Health and Human Services Committee, said he turned down requests to sponsor another 50 or 60 bills.

Wesley and his compatriots set a new record this year. They introduced 761 bills and a dozen other legislative resolutions during the first ten days for the 1987 session.

About one-third will become law before the senators return home in late May or early June.

And as they make decisions on everything from raising the state fishing permit fee by $2 to the $500 million University of Nebraska budget, senators will be listening to many voices.

Constituents — the ones who write letters, telephone or approach a senator at a civic meeting — are among those voices.

IN FACT MOST senators say that constituents are boss. Constituents opinion plays a heavy role in their decisions.

But a well-reasoned letter is worth more than a thousand mimeographed postcards, senators agree.

"The thing we deplore are those printed letters and cards. I'd rather see someone scratch ten words on a post card," said Sen. Emil Beyer of Gretna.

"The computer cards (like those opposing a cigarette tax hike printed by a cigarette lobby several years ago) the mimeographed letters. Those go in the trash," says Sen. Sandra Scofield of Chadron. "But if someone writes a well reasoned letter and really knows an issue, how that has impact, I might even call that person up to get more information," she says.

We're always searching out people who have developed an expertise on an issue," Scofield says.

Beyer says most of his constituent opinions come personally from the people he talks to at coffee shops, church and civic organizations. Letters are a secondary source.

OFTEN CITIZENS send letters to senators who hold the same view. It's important, according to Beyer, to present your opinions to senators who disagree with your viewpoint. "We need both views because sometimes our view isn't right."

Most senators answer every letter (except those form messages). Many use a traditional reply — thanking the constituent for the view and promising to consider those views.

Few senators pledge to vote one way or another on a specific bill. They know the bill may become a horse of a different color with amendments.

Sen. Jerome Warner of Waverly waits until after the session ends to answer many of his letters. Then he explains his vote and the reasons behind it.

Warner, who's served 24 years, says his letter load has decreased in recent years. Warner guesses that his predictable stand on many issues means fewer letters.

Senators' office staff also answer constituent questions and can sometimes work out constituent problems with bureaucracy. This service is particularly important for western Nebraskans, Scofield says.

"It's a three-day trip (to Lincoln) for my constituents," says Scofield. The Legislature has also established a toll free number for Nebraskans who want information on legislation including the status of every bill.

That number is 800-742-7456. The staff members who answer this number provide information and can send copies of bills to patrons. But they don't provide any interpretation and they can't pass along opinions to senators.

I swear that I heard a lawn mower running in my neighborhood on Sunday.

This past week was in January, wasn't it? Was it Feb. 7 when our weatherman predicted a high of 60 degrees, just five days after the groundhog managed to see its shadow? If this is six more weeks of winter, I'd had to see what summer's heat has got in store for us.

How rare is it that one can smell the food coming off the outdoor grill, warm enough to have a picnic on the patio? Isn't "suit jacket only" weather reserved for Easter, not on a Sunday in January?

This nice weather is teasing us and trying to get us into the "spring fever," although those people who have precious plants and trees already starting to bud (and only in February) might not think of it as so funny.

About a year ago, later in the spring, this area was pelted with one of most blinding snowstorms I have ever witnessed. Don't count us out of this winter yet.

The change in the weather certainly brings a change in the attitude of people. I'm a firm believer in that.

THE FIRST WARM weather of the winter results in: catching up on the washing of the automobiles; perhaps sighting the first robin; signs that the rhubarb is about to make an early entry; the loud smacking sound of the baseball or softball as it hits the mitt; cattle wading in mud to their knees; constant reminders by mother/wife to take off the shoes before entering the house.

You can tell warm weather has arrived by: noticing the number of people who are playing basketball in their drives or on school property; observing the guys getting a little more serious about their goals, especially when Valentine's Day, Prom and other memorable events like high school graduation are fast arriving; watching people tinker with the lawn mower engine, hoping that it will start at the first pull; observing high school state play-off basketball, wrestling and soon the track-and-golf season.

Spring is about to break loose when the roads in the county soften up and literally go to pot; leftover Christmas toys are on sale; the seed catalogs for the "perfect garden" arrive in the mail heralding the growing season; bold individuals wear cut-offs; the coughing, aching and sneezing cold that you were able to avoid in the bitterly cold weather of December hits you on the rebound of a warming trend; the mice are about ready to come out of the walls; you are able to find the leaves left on the ground during the previous fall that needed to be raked up and hauled away to the dump.

YOU CAN TELL warm weather hits when the smell of burning leaves and branches fill the country air; the sunsets seem to be in glorious color; when people begin to get the itch to go on a vacation and get away from the cabin fever feelings.

Last Sunday on a warm spring-like day, my wife had reported some plants. She wanted me to get some dirt from the garden for more fill. I got about two inches of the good topsoil but could not get any deeper because the ground below the topsoil was still frozen.

Back to reality: It doesn't really pay to rush the season.

All this nice weather, too, can make a person sleepy. This column is being written with one eye on the typing screen and another halfway (all the way) closed.

It's too early to be wishing for Spring Fever? Probably, but it's nice to be given a sample of what's to come, at least every once in a while.

Wall Street fraud considered uncommon

By Richard L. Lesher President Chamber of Commerce of the United States "There is scarcely an instance of a man who has made a fortune by speculation and kept it," said Andrew Carnegie in 1902.

I think Carnegie was right. The insider trading cases that have rocked Wall Street in recent weeks are really nothing new, nor are they a reason for investors to become alarmed. In every field of endeavor there will always be certain individuals who, in their avarice, play fast and loose with the law. They invariably come to a sorry end.

As for those who predicted the insider trading scandal would jerk the plug from the market and send investors fleeing in droves, I believe the market itself has answered that question, attaining new highs in recent weeks. If anything, the apprehension of a few rascals seems to have restored confidence that cops are on the beat and no one is above the law. In truth, it does appear that fraudulent practices are the exception, not the rule, on Wall Street. The Securities and Exchange Commission estimates there is $50 billion in securities traded on a daily basis. If all fraud is counted, including insider trading, the SEC estimates it amounts to "a tiny fraction of one percent."

IT IS POSSIBLE that more law enforcement would enhance protection of small investors, just as more policemen would make our streets safer. But the most effective protection available to small investors is to simply be wary, reading carefully the prospectus of every firm considered for investment. Quite often a prospectus will offer a brutally frank analysis of a company's potential, but too often investors neglect to read them and get stuck. When people go around looking for a quick kill, they usually find one — their own.

The stock market is the ultimate barometer of the health of our economy. The shenanigans of a few miscreants are unlikely to have a lasting effect upon the real value of this nation's corporations. In the long run, it is the productivity and efficiency of a corporation that determines its value, and that is what smart investors will look at.

Judging by recent stock market performance, that is exactly what they are looking at, and they like what they see.

Budget in need of balance

By Jim Exon United States Senator From Nebraska I recently introduced legislation to amend the U.S. Constitution to require a balanced federal budget. This is the first bill I introduced in the 100th Congress because I believe it should be the first priority of Congress to reduce the national debt and balance the budget.

My proposal would impose three important requirements. First, unlike other proposals, my amendment would require the President to submit a balanced federal budget to Congress. Second, it would mandate that the Congress enact into law a balanced federal budget. Third, and most important, it would make it very difficult for any appropriations bills to exceed the budgeted amounts.

These three points also emphasize my reasons for introducing the amendment. First, the current President has never submitted a balanced budget to Congress. Second, it will require the Congress and the President to work together while mandating that the bottom line is a balanced budget. Third, the enforcement measures are essential since it is all too common for Congress to adopt a budget and then pass appropriations bills costing more than the budgeted amounts.

The national debt has more than doubled in the last six years to over $2 trillion and $200-plus billion deficits have now become commonplace. As disturbing is the fact that the President has just sent to Congress a $1 trillion budget. The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office says the President's budget deficit estimate is off at least $30 billion and that even if the President's budget is accepted by Congress, the deficit next year would be at least $135 billion. The President's budget does not even meet the deficit targets set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

It's time the federal government learn a lesson from the State of Nebraska which is required by state constitution to balance its budget. As governor of Nebraska, I had the benefit of a state balanced budget constitutional amendment. I found it valuable in controlling the spending and taxing authority of the legislature. It is long overdue that the federal government operate under a constitutional balanced budget mandate.

THE LACK OF presidential and congressional leadership on the budget issue has been irresponsible and dangerous. The President and the Congress have been more interested in assigning blame than in working together to balance the books.

Over the years, I have offered alternative budgets which would have made serious attacks on the deficit. Even though the proposals received bi-partisan support, there was insufficient support to pass them. The Congress and Administration have repeatedly chosen to conduct business as usual using the old formula of spend and borrow.

Advocating a Constitutional Amendment alone will not magically balance the budget or cure our nation's economic ills. The enactment of a prudent long-term budget, which asks for fair shared sacrifice in all programs, is the only way the budget can be balanced.

Budget deficits are a crushing force on our economy. The reckless spending of the last six years has spread economic havoc across America, created the worst trade deficit in history and has shifted America from the world's largest creditor to the world's largest debtor nation. Nowhere is the cost of the supply-side revolution more evident than in rural America, where farmers, businesses and entire communities are working through a virtual depression. Our opportunities as a nation and world economic power can be enhanced only after we tame the debt and deficit giants.

A government, like a family or a business, cannot continue to spend more than it has without facing financial ruin. The passage of this Constitutional Amendment is vital to the economic future of the nation.

Balancing children and marriage

It's hearts and flowers time again and people think of doing something special for their spouse. Sometimes we only put our spouse first a few times each year.

Couple-centered or child-centered families? Where does our first responsibility lie, in the marriage or in parenting. Certainly the awesome task of parenting requires all the time we can afford. But what about the marriage? Marriage therapists Malcolm and Mildred McIver suggest that couples carefully balance the attention given to the marriage and to parenting. How a person relates to his or her spouse is a key to good parenting. It's difficult to love your spouse and neglect your children. A child gains security in knowing his parents love and respect each other.

CHILDREN CARRY subtle impressions of our marriage and home for life. Caring supportive couples demonstrate to their children how they can develop positive relationships with others.

Children live with us for a brief time and your spouse may be a partner for life. Our job as a parent is to gradually make ourselves unnecessary. We hope to teach our children how to be self-supporting and independent as they grow to adulthood.

YOU CAN STRENGTHEN your relationship with your spouse by setting aside time for daily sharing. The idea is to plan time each day to share your needs, wishes and feelings with your spouse. Once the habit is established you won't want to miss your daily sharing time.

Choose the time of day to suit yourselves and your schedules. Ten to 20 minutes may be all the time required. Plan to make it a pleasant time. Aim at feeling close and good after a sharing time.

The objective is to report to each other without interruptions or comments. Give your spouse whatever comfort or support is needed, but don't try to solve his or her problems. If you try to mix other objectives with the sharing time, it will stop being a pleasant experience.

Make a contract now to do this for one week and then, if you both agree, for another week. You may need to experiment to find the best time.

Above all, remember to keep it pleasant and deal with other issues separately. Once the habit is established you may wonder how on earth you ever managed without touching base with each other everyday.

Some of the species which have benefited from the program include some 17 endangered or threatened species, as well as other songbirds, hawks and owls, wading and shorebirds, flying squirrels, swift fox, and a variety of groups and turtles.

The Commission has used those funds in three major areas: to restore or reverse the decline of endangered and threatened species; to help prevent other nongame species from slipping into those categories; and by establishing an information and education program that promotes values, conservation needs, and nonconsumptive uses of wildlife.

Some of the programs using check-off funds include:

—Reintroduction of the river otter, an endangered species in Nebraska. To date eight otters have been released along the South Loup River and plans call for another 80-100 to be released in four areas during the next several years.

—Enhancement and protection of least tern and piping plover nesting habitat.

—Implementing a natural heritage program that will computerize information identifying ecological values of plant and animal species, plant communities, aquatic systems, and critical habitats that are of particular interest because they are exemplary, rare or endangered at the state or national level.

—Financing a portion of Project WILD, a public information and awareness program conducted in schools that teaches young people how to think, not what to think, about wildlife.

—Development and distribution of informational kits and brochures on Nebraska's barn owl; whooping crane; sandhill cranes; Nebraska's nongame and wildlife poster featuring winter bird feeding tips; and bluebird information kits that will be available to youth groups this fall.

Lock says check-off funds have also financed programs that benefit other wildlife species, such as nest box installations for kestrels along I-80 between Lincoln and Omaha; of-fering nest boxes to rural landowners to benefit barn owls; funding of a

Chapman said Johnson bench presses 475 pounds, runs the 40-yard dash in five seconds and has a vertical jump of more than 30 inches. He will be a pre-physical therapy major when he enrolls in the fall.
