Area bikers involved

BRAN event draws closer

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

BRAN 7 nears, and several individuals from the Wayne and Laurel area will be among the hundreds who will be ready when the trans-Nebraska bicycle ride begins.

BRAN (Bike Ride Across Nebraska) begins in Alliance early on Sunday, June 7 and ends at Fort Omaha on Saturday, June 13.

There are over 500 bicycle riders registered for the event, sponsored by the Northwest Omaha Rotary Club and the Omaha Pedalers Bicycle Club. And one of the overnight stops on the 475 mile will be in Wayne, the home of at least six or seven of the bikers who will be making the long BRAN journey.

John Struve of Wayne has participated in seven BRAN rides with several members of his family. This year, his son Jeff will be crossing the state with him. Both he and Jeff (who is on his fourth BRAN trip and was only 10 years old on his first trip) will be departing Thursday (June 4) to Merriman, Nebraska.

From there, they will have a "Pre-BRAN" ride to the starting point in Alliance—a way to get in shape for the long journey which they have coming in the days to follow.

Struve said his son has the edge in training for the ride. During the winter, John said he has lifted weights, but has not done any extensive bicycle riding. "I guess I just have to get it out," John said.

OTHER WAYNE ADULTS who will be riding in BRAN include Joan Brogie, Dr. Jim Lindau and Dave Curley, a newcomer to Wayne who will be a student at Wayne State College. Brock Gleise is another possible candidate for the bicycle ride.

Lindau said he has been bicycling at least three times a week at distances of 15 to 20 miles in preparing for the long ride.

Brogie has also been training rigorously during the past three weeks for BRAN. This is her first BRAN trip, although she is an avid bicycle rider and has ambitions to go on the Nebraska bicycle tour for at least four years. "I had to go on to summer school, however," she said.

Now is an opportune time for Brogie, a teacher of English and Speech at Laurel-Concord High School, to make the trip. "I've always enjoyed cross-country bicycling," she said.

On Monday of this week, she got up at around 6 a.m. and joined others in riding 20 to 25 miles. On Sunday afternoon, she logged in 40 miles' worth of conditioning for the BRAN trip.

Her conditioning actually started in January as she rode the stationary bicycle at school.

The plan she expects to follow is to get up and leave the BRAN overnight sites at 5:30 or 6 a.m. and get to the next destination early so that ample time is available to rest before going on.

"I expect the trip to be a lot of fun and I am looking forward to meeting a lot of people," Brogie said.

TWO AREA HIGH school youths will also be participating in BRAN, and appear to be taking conditioning for the bicycle ride very seriously. Michael Freeman, age 16, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dwayne Freeman of Laurel and a junior at Laurel-Concord, was unavailable for comment Tuesday evening.

But Angela, his younger sister, is confident that Michael will endure the cross country tour. "I'm a little bit nervous and worried he might get hurt or something," she said, adding that she will be anxiously waiting to see her older brother at the Wayne destination.

During May, almost on a daily basis, he has been riding up to 35 miles to condition for his first-ever BRAN ride. "One Saturday, he did it twice," Angela said.

Angela said she had been thinking about someday participating in BRAN. "But not right now," she said.

ANOTHER high school youth participating in the ride is Jed O'Leary of Wayne. O'Leary said he feels he is ready for the trip, as he has been conditioning himself lately with bicycle rides to Carroll and a one way 55 mile journey to Oakland. During the next few days, he plans on taking bicycle trips of 60 miles or more to condition himself for the long trek across Nebraska.

He returned from Colorado Tuesday night, where he logged approximately 50 miles on several Colorado trails.

Curley makes inches out of miles

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

A 475 mile journey across Nebraska on bicycle certainly won't be the toughest obstacle that 32 year old Dave Curley has ever faced in his lifetime.

Certainly, BRAN is a challenge to many people. But to Curley, who recently moved from Norfolk to Wayne, the BRAN event is more of a conquest. He knows a lot about conquering challenges.

Six years ago, in August of 1981, Curley was a passenger in a vehicle that was broadsided by another vehicle at an intersection between Atkinson and O'Neill. He suffered very critical injuries.

For several years he had undergone rehabilitation procedures at Sister Kenny Institute in Minneapolis. Curley, who at one time was swift afoot and loved to run cross country, was looking down the road of recovery from a wheelchair. "I really hate to remember those years."

He can no longer jog or run.

BUT HE has traded those wheelchair wheels for an opportunity to do what he loves most — bicycling.

"I never even attempted to get on a bicycle before that, because I enjoyed running so much," Curley said. "Now, bicycling is my life. It is the so-called major reason why I'm still around here." Curley mentioned in an interview Tuesday evening.

About two years ago he purchased a 10-speed bike, and his love for the two-wheel mode of transportation has never ceased.

"I feel a bit more in control when I ride a bicycle. And it doesn't consume a lot of gasoline. It's 'el-cheapo,'" he remarked.

On Tuesday, he traveled on his bike to Wakefield and back. He has made several bicycle trips to Neligh, Plain view, Pierce, Battle Creek, Stanton and Clarkson.

"Last winter was great for me. There was no snow and I rode my bicycle every single day," he mentioned.

"This is Curley's first BRAN ride. Some day he would like to ride his bicycle coast to coast across the United States. He is currently enrolled in several classes this fall at Wayne State College.

DAVE CURLEY anxiously awaits the long BRAN ride that starts June 7.

The field of the 500 plus riders in BRAN are from Nebraska and 16 other surrounding states. BRAN began in 1981 with 68 riders. The ride grew in popularity quickly with 248 riders participating in 1982 and 310 riders in 1983. Registration has been restricted since 1984 to the 500 plus riders.

The first BRAN ride started in Fremont and went west to Scottsbluff. All other rides have begun in the west and gone to the east, with BRAN 5 begin the longest at 549 miles.

The BRAN Committee plans the route and travels every mile of the ride months before the start. Safety notations are made. Arrangements are made in each community to assure there are meals and other accommodations for the riders. The State Highway Patrol is notified and consulted during route planning.

A REPAIR vehicle, a first aid vehicle and a "sag" vehicle (to pick up weary riders) are provided throughout the ride. A portion of the cost in planning the ride and providing services is covered by BRAN corporate sponsors that include Rockbrook Schwinn, John F. Wupper D.D.S., UNAC Sports Medicine Team and Arrow Stage Lines.

Registering for BRAN 7 cost $35 per person, to cover the organizational expenses, vehicle expenses, T-Shirts and other expenses of BRAN.

Revenues in excess of expenditures for the project go to the Northwest Omaha Rotary Club Scholarship fund, used to provide scholarships to Nebraska colleges and universities.

According to the BRAN schedule, the 500 plus riders will take off from Alliance and travel nearly 58 miles to Hyannis. The next destination on June 8 is from Hyannis to Halsey National Forest, which is 78.7 miles.

On June 9, the riders will have gone the greatest single day distance in reaching Ord. From Ord, the group travels (on June 10) to Neligh, covering some 78 miles.

WAYNE WILL BE the June 11 destination from Neligh, covering approximately 72 miles. The next day the bikers will stay overnight in Tekamah, riding some 62.7 miles, before wrapping up their journey on

Dixon becomes resting stop for well-traveled horseman

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

Former long distance trucker Pat Hogan is making the long haul again. Hogan's destination is eventually the Yellowstone Park area in northwest Wyoming. But he isn't carrying his load across the nation's highways on a big trailer pulled by a fancy rig.

He has the horsepower he needs to get where he is going — the power of two horses.

Hogan had been traveling along Highway 20 since he left Southgate,

Michigan on horseback "a little better than a month ago."

Last Friday, Hogan stayed at the Bill Moore residence in Dixon. Moore had spotted Hogan on Highway 20 and offered his hospitality to the traveler who had just passed through heavy rains around the Sioux City area.

In Moore's yard, in front of a tent, Hogan was spreading out his traveling gear to dry on a blanket. His two geldings Solid and Sandy (one riding

Wakefield firm expands

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

Gardner Growers of Wakefield have announced plans to expand their pullet growing operation in the Wakefield area.

Construction has already begun on the first of four new growing houses located four miles north and 1 1/2 miles west of Wakefield, according to Dave Gardner, vice president and general manager of the Waldbaum Company of Wakefield.

Future plans will also include four additional growing houses, for a total of eight on the 40 acre construction site.

The existing pullet farm is located two miles east of Wakefield. There are seven growing houses located on this site.

Gardner Growers raises baby chicks, which they receive from hatcheries throughout Iowa, Illinois or Minnesota, until the chicks are about 20 weeks old.

Gardner said the chicks are then transferred to a laying house. "Most of them go to the Big Red Farms nearby," said Gardner.

GARDNER MENTIONED that each pullet house will have the capacity of 60,000 birds and would be capable of raising two flocks per year.

Once the pullet house additions are completed, the number of birds used by Gardner Growers and the Waldbaum Company in its operations will reach up to 2.25 million in Nebraska.

The company also has egg laying operations in Colorado, but no birds are grown there. "We have about 800,000 birds there (in Colorado) to date," said Gardner.

The move to expand Gardner Growers pullet growing operation in Wakefield is based on the company's efforts to maintain quality control, such as with feeding requirements, over its bird population and to assure a more uniform bird from one day old to when it reaches the laying stage, Gardner said.

THERE WILL BE savings in costs that will be realized, according to Gardner.

"But we still won't have enough birds to take care of our entire operations," he remarked.

Gardner said he expects the first additional pullet growing unit to be completed by July 1. All four growing houses, he said, are expected to be completed in October.

No completion date was mentioned as to when the added four growing houses, planned for the future, would be completed.

The four new growing houses completed this year will result in the employment of approximately 10 people, according to Gardner.

Hoskins banker gains office

Fred Otten, president of Commercial State Bank in Hoskins, was elected May 15 to a two-year term on the board of directors of the Nebraska Electronic Transfer System, Inc. (NetWorks), an organization which oversees the shared network of automatic teller machines in Nebraska.

Otten succeeds Scribner banker Jim Lufes on the 22-member board. He was elected during the organization's annual meeting, held May 15, at the Cornhusker Hotel.

Currently, there are some 311 members in the System, including banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, and other retail firms owning point-of-sale terminals. Some three million transactions were processed through the System's switching center during the 1986 calendar year alone, reported board chairman Jack Holmquist, president of York State Bank, which was a record-high.

KWPN increases watts

KWPN Radio has filed an application with the Federal Communications Commission to increase the station's operating power from its present 500 watts to 5,000 watts.

The increased power will, according to station manager David Kelly, help overcome some man-made electrical interference like that caused by fluorescent lights, improve reception in steel buildings and improve KWPN's signal in the Wayne area. As an example of the station's coverage change, the half-milliwatt per meter signal that now covers Sioux City, Iowa would instead extend past Sioux Falls, SD.

Approval of the application by the FCC could take as long as a year to process. Under the proposed plan, KWPN will continue to operate during daylight hours although the Commission is currently considering a plan to allow nighttime service by all daytime stations at reduced power levels.

Inducted into Honor Society

Perry Benshoof, son of former Wayne residents Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Benshoof, was recently inducted into the Honor Society at Blue Ridge Community College of Weyers Cave, Va., where he is majoring in criminal justice.

Perry, who is the grandson of Erwin Vahlkamp of Wayne, has also been on the Dean's List the past two quarters. He attended Wayne State College before moving to Virginia.

Business Notes

Dick Wendel has been promoted to controller at Coleman Powermate, Inc.

Dale Watley, executive vice president and chief operating officer, named Wendel to head the accounting and financial operations of the company, which has factories in Kearney and Hastings, Nebraska.

Wendel, a native of Laurel, earned a Bachelor's degree in business administration at Wayne (Neb.) State University in 1973. He then joined Ag-Tronic and has served in several accounting/finance posts in his 14 years with the company.

Wayne Public Library plans summer reading programs

Wayne Public Library has announced two summer reading programs designed for youngsters of all ages. The first is "Greatest Show of All."

Older children are invited to participate in the program by reading books and reporting on them.

For children who cannot yet read, the library will have a read-to-me storytime. Children must be at least three years old to attend.

Registration for both programs is Monday, June 8 at 2 p.m. at the library.

LIBRARIAN KATHLEEN Tooker said older children participating in the reading program will decide on how many books he or she can read and report on them during the program. At least six books must be read, and all books must come from Wayne Public Library.

The reader will sign a contract with the library for the number of books he or she plans to read. When the reader has read and reported on the number of books signed in the contract, he or she can select a paperback book as a gift.

Tooker said for every book read, the reader can make one guess on the number of jelly beans in a jar. At the end of the program, the youngster with the closest guess wins the jelly beans.

Tooker stressed that youngsters should read at their reading level. A reader can only report on three books a day, and reports will not be accepted the first 15 minutes the library is open or the last 15 minutes before closing.

All youngsters who complete the program will be invited to attend a party on July 8 at 2 p.m. Children attending the party are asked to come dressed as a circus performer.

THE READ-TO-ME storytime will be held each Monday, June 15 through July 6, at 2 p.m.

The library will keep a record of the books that have been read to the child at home. For each book read, the child can enter his or her name in the contest for a jar of jelly beans. Books must be from Wayne Public Library.

Each youngster that has had eight or more books read to him or her, will receive a certificate at the last storytime.

Bereuter: No religion programs banned

Recently several Nebraskans have contacted me about rumors of attempts to remove religious broadcasting from the airwaves. These rumors have been circulating for years, and they are inaccurate.

Cong.
Doug

must treat religious and secular organizations alike in determining their eligibility for broadcasting channels.

In December, 1974, a petition from Jeremy D. Lansman and Lorenzo W. Milan asked the Federal Communications Commission to inquire, among other subjects, into the operating practices of noncommercial educational broadcasting stations, including those licenses being granted for any new noncommercial educational stations until the requested inquiry had been complete. The Lansman-Milan petition, which was routinely assigned the number EM2493, was denied by the FCC on August 1, 1975. The FCC explained that it is required by the First Amendment to observe a stance of neutrality toward religion, acting neither to promote nor to inhibit religion. It also explained that it

Early in 1975, the FCC began to receive mail which indicated that in many parts of the country there were rumors claiming the petitioners of EM2493 had called for an end to religious broadcasting and that the FCC was going to prohibit religious programs on radio and television. Such rumors are false. Additional mail and telephone calls came in from people who thought that Mrs. Madalyn Murray O'Hair, a well-known atheist, was a sponsor of EM2493, or had separately proposed that the FCC consider limiting or banning religious programming, and that she had been granted a Federal hearing to discuss this matter. Those rumors are also false.

SINCE 1975 the FCC has received over 16 million pieces of mail and a corresponding number of telephone calls on the mistaken belief that the Commission was considering, in EM2493, a ban on broadcasting religious programming. Despite many efforts to advise the public of the action on EM2493, the rumors still persist.

No Federal law or regulation gives the FCC the authority to prohibit radio and television stations from presenting religious programs. The Communications Act (the law established the FCC and defines its authority) prohibits the Commission from censoring broadcast material and from interfering with freedom of speech in broadcasting. The Commission cannot direct any broadcaster to present, or refrain from presenting, announcements or programs on religious, and it cannot act as a judge of the wisdom or accuracy of such material. Broadcasters—not the FCC or any other governmental agency—are responsible for selecting the programming that is aired by their stations.

I hope that those who have been concerned about this matter will be reassured by this information. The Federal Communications Commission has no intention of attempting to remove religious programming from the air. In fact they are expressly prohibited from ruling on the content of broadcasting.

To reduce surplus Exon says ethanol a priority

Ethanol development has always been a priority of mine. It has been and will continue to be an avenue for our nation to move toward less dependence on foreign oil.

To further the development of ethanol I have introduced legislation which would bolster our faltering farm economy, increase our energy independence, and make good use of burdening agricultural grain surpluses owned by the federal government.

In a nutshell, this legislation would require the Secretary of Agriculture to make surplus Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) stocks available to states for the construction of expansion of fuel ethanol production facilities. This approach is an innovative and positive step for so many reasons that I hardly know where to begin.

It is no secret that the federal government is, unfortunately, the owner of vast quantities of farm commodities. Much of this grain is going out of condition as we wait for elusive export markets to expand. This legislation would empower the Secretary of Agriculture to make good use of the grain and create a new market for future agriculture production. By making these stocks available to state entities we could rid ourselves of poor quality grain supplies and the storage costs that go with them.

Nebraska has been a leader in ethanol development. Nebraska's advances have been the result of continued hard work to develop both supply demands for fuel ethanol. This legislation recognizes the fact that Nebraska and other states have taken it upon themselves to nurture this important industry and relies heavily on state-level expertise to further that development.

Nebraska has also been the sight of recent testing to develop more efficient ways to produce ethanol. By utilizing a fermentation process which relies on bacteria rather than yeast, great advances have been made which could produce ethanol faster and at less cost than current methods. Although wide-scale use of this process will not occur immediately, it is very conceivable that new technology, combined with this legislation, could serve as the foundation for significant fuel ethanol advances.

Quite simply we have too much American grain and not enough American oil. This legislation recognizes that fact and does something about it.

No changes in Initiative 300

"Political fear"—that's what keeps senators from proposing any changes in the Constitutional Amendment banning corporate farming in Nebraska, according to Sen. Lee Rupp of Monroe.

This is one of those issues that would get 45 votes on a secret ballot of senators, Rupp contends. Yet in five years the Legislature has not been able to muster 25 votes to pass any change in Initiative 300.

Every session, Rupp says, "we start out with 32 to 35 votes. Then senators feel the hot breath of citizens and that support melts down to 22 votes."

That scenario played out again this session. Three measures that would have paved the way for changes in the corporate farming ban did not make it through. A bill that would have allowed business trusts to engage in farming, was declared unconstitutional by the Attorney General and killed by the Legislature. A Constitutional Amendment making minor changes in the family farm amendment is at first-round approval stage and a bill, putting the words of the Constitutional Amendment into statute is still in committee.

The only hope for those who want changes in the family farm amendment is another petition drive to get the proposed changes on the ballot,

Rupp says. "Eventually that's the only way this issue is going to get resolved."

AND THAT ROUTE is how the current debate began. Supporters of a ban on corporate farming gathered enough signatures to get the proposal (called Initiative 300) on the ballot in 1982 and Nebraska voters approved what was commonly called the family farm amendment.

From the beginning, the constitutional ban pit western ranchers who want to lease land for the grazing of corporate owned cattle against eastern farmers who cannot afford competition from giant corporate farms.

The amendment goes far beyond the regulation of land ownership and land use to regulating who can own personal property, who can own livestock, Rupp says. And that's where much of the conflict lies.

The Constitutional Amendment has driven commercial feedlots from the state and robbed western ranchers of income from leased land.

It always has been an emotional issue, an issue colored by resentment of the powerless against the powerful.

Urban residents voted yes for Initiative 300 believing they were protecting the family farmer against the corporate giants, Rupp says. And voters were incensed by the desecration of Sandhill land by large corporate owners, including the Prudential Insurance Co., which farmed the tax code. They plowed the delicate land, installed center pivots and harvested federal tax breaks by losing money.

That resentment lingers. Sen. Donald Wesley of Lincoln who represents no farmer or rancher says there is continued support within his north Lincoln community for the ban on corporate farming.

Many of his constituents are blue collar workers, he says. "And there is a natural affinity to family farmers, to the little guys. They see Initiative 300 as one way to level the playing field."

Wesley himself has modified his own views since his initial wholehearted support of Initiative 300. He now understands that there are some problems with the complex amendment. He would personally support some changes to solve specific problems. But he is frustrated by the refusal of those who support and those who oppose the corporate farming ban to reach a compromise.

"Whenever we try to accommodate, to find a reasonable ground, we reap animosity from both sides."

Viewpoint

WSC outlook

Wayne State College Interim President Dr. Joseph Fleck isn't fooled by the word temporary. While his responsibilities now lie with focusing on the immediate needs of Wayne State, he must also look toward the direction of the college's future.

It is not a matter of just trying to maintain the status quo, but Fleck can sense that the college must continue its efforts in moving forward.

He told the Wayne Kiwanis members on Monday that he will continue to revise the organization at Wayne State, and will be aggressive in promotional changes.

Wayne State will continue offering quality education, not particularly because the college has a new president, he said, but because each of the academic units at the college are strong. He plans on implementing the general education changes made during 1986-87.

He would like to see the college become more active in public relations, steadily promoting the college to the general public.

Fleck said he would like to see classroom sizes reduced. Efforts should be continued to "tap the creative capacity of faculty (and students) that are there on campus."

Excellence of the programs reflects on the quality of faculty and staff on board at Wayne State. "We continue to have a high placement rate. Parents and students continue to comment on the success of the program," Fleck said.

"You will seldom find a campus that is more concerned in the total development of the students than at Wayne State," he said.

Needs for the college, he said, are in the areas of salaries so that the college can compete for talented professors. Positions are getting more difficult to fill as each school year passes by, Fleck said.

Fleck said Wayne State College is "alive and very well" and will have the strength and talent to confront the challenges that fall ahead.

The anticipated increase in enrollment of freshman speaks well for the academic program and the other positive happenings now happening at Wayne State College. Present enrollment figures are "quite good," with a 6 percent increase over where the college was in enrollment about a year ago.

Parents and Grandparents of "Wayne, America" how would you feel if your children or grandchildren were visiting in small town America, a stranger offered you a child or grandchild a ride, and you received this unconcerned treatment from the local law enforcement authorities?

In this day and age adults should know better than to go around offering children rides. The local authorities seemed to have an attitude of "It can't happen here" but it could.

Notch inequity

Notchers, keep writing our representatives re: the notch inequity to those of us who were born between 1917 and 1921 regardless of their disagreements with us. It will help correct the situation if we keep on pressing the issue.

Many senators agree that we are being treated unfairly. In the last issue of the AARP paper I receive, Rep. Edward R. Raybal of California writes, "Social Security is financially solvent well into the next century. Social Security Administration Actuaries project Annual Surpluses totaling $540 billion by 1995, with even larger accumulations projected for the years 1996-2015. Certainly, some of these surpluses could be used to correct this inequity (the notch) without damaging the long-term financial solvency of Social Security. If we want to restore young people's confidence in Social Security, we should restore some of the benefits to individuals who have helped to make Social Security into a successful and viable insurance program."

Raybal is chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging and they are trying to help the older group of citizens in many ways. Spend 22 cents or 44 cents and write Washington. Let our representatives know that we know there are some in Congress who care about us.

Cramer donates to Niobrara State Park beautification

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

Construction of an interpretive shelter, which will be one of the newest facilities at Niobrara State Park, has received the financial backing of a Wayne man.

Alan Cramer, Wayne Herald publisher, provided the gift to construct the interpretive shelter, poised above the valley. The facility will house information, contained on bronze plaques, about the history of the area.

That history will include the affairs of Indians and explorers, traders and river men, immigrants and townspeople. The hills of the new park were part of the Ponca domain throughout most of the tribe's tenure in Nebraska. Some of the most famous explorers to view the area and visit the Poncas were Lewis and Clark.

Other information includes the "Trail of Tears" on which the Poncas were forced to leave their homeland for Oklahoma; Fort Mitchell, a fur trading post established in 1833 and abandoned in 1837; and John J. Audubon, the famous naturalist and painter.

Another bronze plaque will be placed in the new Interpretive Center which will cite Cramer for donating an undisclosed amount of money to build the shelter.

NIORBARA State Park is northeast Nebraska's newest outdoor recreation complex. Perched on 1,231 acres, it provides a view of the Missouri and Niobrara River Valley. The Interpretive Center will help to embellish the recent improvements made at Niobrara State Park, according to Cramer.

Those recent featured developments at Niobrara State Park include 15 fully modern, all-weather cabins and nearly six miles of new roads.

"It is important to me that northeast Nebraska has a wonderful new park facility. There has been so much activity [of park development] in other areas of the state," Cramer said.

Cramer said northeast Nebraska is currently facing difficulties and troubles. "A lot of families, associated with farms and with businesses, are undergoing a lot of stress right now," he said.

"Hopefully the park will allow the families to have some relaxing outings, so that they can forget about their troubles and stress. If the Interpretive Shelter helps them, then that factor pleases me," Cramer said.

THE INTERPRETIVE Shelter will honor the region's native American history.

"There is a lot of history in this area that people are not aware of. This interpretive shelter will spell that out," mentioned Cramer.

Cramer has been a member of the Nebraska Game and Parks Foundation since it was organized about three years ago. The Foundation was formed "to enhance the work of the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission, its staff and employees."

HE WAS ELECTED the first vice president of the Foundation. "We are the vehicle for soliciting and accepting contributions toward outdoor recreation for Nebraska," Cramer mentioned.

The Foundation is completely separate from the Commission, he said. "We have solicited gifts such as money, land, horses, ranches and all other kinds of contributions," he added.

The 15 member Foundation board consists of five individuals from Greater Nebraska; and five each from Omaha and Lincoln.

The grand opening and dedication of Niobrara State Park is slated for Saturday, July 11.

Cramer, who is also a director with the Nebraska Game and Parks Foundation, will give the dedication address.

The boys visited the Northeast Station near Concord and camped out at Ikes Lake to earn their patches.

The same scouts also participated in the Arrow of Light ceremony, inducting them into the Boy Scouts.

There will be no more Pack meetings until next fall, but the scouts are looking forward to a camp-out with their fathers to take place June 27 and 28 at the Pilger Rec Area. Tentative dates have also been set for a swim party and hayrack ride.

June 13 at Fort Omaha, which is a 39.2 mile jaunt.

John Struve will be The Wayne Herald contact person during the trip.

There are several activities being planned for the bikers once they reach Wayne, he said.

The Wayne Educational Office Personnel Association will be sponsoring a breakfast for the riders early Friday morning (June 12) at the Sav-Mor parking lot as a fund raiser for group activities. The breakfast will begin around 4:30 a.m., to provide nourishment to the riders before they leave Wayne and head to Tekamah, Struve mentioned.

Most of the riders, when arriving, will be staying at the Wayne State College Willow Bowl or someplace in the southeast corner of the campus, Struve said. A shuttle will be available for the riders, run from the WSC campus to downtown businesses, furnished by Logan Valley Implement, Red Carr Implement and Midland Equipment.

GIRL SCOUTS from Wayne will be providing a booth north of the high school to hand out information packages and gifts supplied by the Wayne merchants. Boy Scouts will be routing the riders through Sherman Street up to 12 Street and on to the Wayne State campus. An information booth will also be manned near the Willow Bowl, according to Struve.

He anticipates the riders to arrive in Wayne around 10 a.m., with most of the contingent coming into the community around the noon hour. He expects most of the riders will be leaving Wayne around 5 or 6 a.m. the next morning.

Horseman

horse and one pack horse) were grazing in a nearby area, getting some needed rest before it was time again to pound the pavement.

"I have a horse with a sore back, which I noticed when I got here [in Dixon]. My main concern is with the horses," he mentioned.

"I also lost a horse in Cushing, Iowa. The mare had twisted its knee. So I traded her for another horse," said Hogan.

HOGAN WAS returning to the northwest Wyoming area where he had worked for several years as a guide and ranch hand. "It's time to go back," he said.

He left the Wyoming country about 1½ years ago. "My mother got sick and it was time to go home and live with her in Michigan," he said.

He later found employment in Minneapolis and then drove truck for a southeastern Minnesota firm. He returned to Southgate to begin his 1,100 mile journey back to Wyoming on horseback.

Hogan chose Highway 20 as his main route. He will follow the route until he gets to Thermopolis, Wyoming. From there he will go to Cody and on to Yellowstone.

During most of his approximately 20 miles a day trip, Hogan has run into dry and windy weather. The load of the horses and Hogan carry weighs up to 150 pounds, with approximately 25 pounds of personal material and equipment which will help sustain him on the long cross country trip and upon returning as guide and ranch hand in Wyoming.

"I carry some sausage that doesn't need any refrigeration," he said.

When the weather is good, Hogan will sleep outside near his horses. On occasions when he and his horses are taken in by farmers and ranchers, he will stay by the corral near the horses.

Hogan was grateful for Moore's invitation to spend a day or two at Moore's residence. He has run into many cordial offers from people along the route.

Moore, who operates a gun shop in Dixon, said he appreciates Hogan's efforts and the leisurely pace Hogan is undergoing in crossing the country. Moore said he plans on doing some hunting in Wyoming later. He doesn't mind letting Hogan spend some time at his home for some good cooking and rest while the horses heal.

Hogan said he owns no vehicles. But he said he doesn't really need any other type of transportation.

"I've got my horses. And that's all I need," he said.

Softball Scoreboard

After a two-week layoff the men's slowpitch A league swung back into action Monday night. The last two weeks games have been washed out at the softball complex.

Wayne Sporting Goods, Sherman's Construction, Waldbaums and PBR all came up with a pair of wins. Waldbaums and Vakoc Construction staged the best battle of the evening. Vakoc was unable to hold the late inning lead and the winners rallied in both games. In the first game Waldbaums scored three runs in the top of the seventh to take an 8-6 win. In the nightcap the winners tallied a run in the bottom of the sixth to earn a 5-4 win.

Shermans won easily in its doubleheader. They bombed Class B opponent KTCH 17-6 and 16-3 in abbreviated games.

Wayne Sporting Goods upped its mark to 4-0 by downing Tom's Body Shop 6-2 and 14-2. PBR received a pair of forfeits over Biermann-Woehler.

The B league also got back into the swing Tuesday night.

Three teams swept their respective doubleheaders and two teams split. Dave's Body Shop upped their record to 3-1 by downing Timpie #2 5-0 and 11-5. Lindner Construction also went to 3-1 with a pair of wins over Timpie #1. Logan Valley won two the easy way when Hardees had to forfeit both games. The best matchup of the evening was the Windmill-Casey vs. Ellingson game. Windmill-Casey's came up with the first game winning 16-5 while Ellingson's won the nightcap by a 5-4 score.

Both teams went scoreless in the seventh inning but the visitors grabbed the 11-9 lead in the eighth inning. The winners upped the margin to three runs heading into the bottom of the ninth. Wakefield fell short coming up with only a single run in the bottom of the ninth.

Blair gathered 15 hits, while the hosts collected 14 hits. Tim Johnson gained the win in relief by throwing four innings, allowing two earned runs on four hits.

Mark Starzl was strapped with the loss as he threw eight innings. Starzl allowed 12 runs on 15 hits while striking out four and walking six.

Mike Hoffart and Jeff Coble led the Wakefield offensive attack. Hoffart went 3-5 with a double and two RBIs. Coble was also 3-5 with a pair of ribbies. Wakefield stranded 14 baserun-ners. Blair was led by several hitters. Mike Janssen was 3-4 with a pair of home runs and five RBIs. Buss Nelson went 4-5 at the plate with one homer and three runs batted in. Jeff Ellis collected four hits and Mike Urdahl was credited three hits.

Wakefield cancelled its game with Wayne, which was set for Tuesday night. Wakefield's next game is set for tonight (Thursday) when they travel to Arlington.

In other Dodge County action on Sunday Scribner downed Dodge 7-3. West Point outlasted North Bend 5-3 in 13 innings. Columbus dumped Arlington 16-12. Snyder downed Fremont 12-4 and Valley bettered Wisner 7-4. In games earlier in the week North Bend nipped Fremont 5-4 and West Point edged Snyder 8-5 and Scribner downed Wisner 8-4.

Pender tournament to resume Sunday

The Wayne girls 18 and under softball team started the season by winning two of its first three games.

The girls, coached by Marilyn Strate and Doug Carroll, played in a round-robin tournament in Pender on Saturday. The games set for Saturday evening and Sunday were cancelled because of rain. Wayne will play Norfolk and Pender in the make-up games on Sunday.

The locals started the tournament by dropping a 14-4 decision to Emerson. Wayne started out in good shape and led after one inning 4-1. Emerson took the lead for good in the third inning when it clicked for eight runs to grab a 9-4 lead. The winners scored its runs on two hits, six walks and five errors.

Robin Lutt started the game on the mound and was later relieved by Dana Nelson.

Wayne nipped Bancroft in the second game by a 14-13 count. An eight-run first innings got the girls off on the "right" foot. Nelson started the game before giving way to Jennifer Hammer. Robin Lutt finished the game.

In the third game of the day the girls downed Stanton 9-7. Lutt got the win. She also went 2-3 at the plate with a triple. Amy Schluns and Lutt each scored a pair of runs. On the field the Wayne pitcher was backed by errorless play.

STRAWBERRY DISEASES

Fruit diseases on strawberries can reduce both yield and quality of the harvested fruit. Selecting a site with adequate air movement and keeping rows narrow (8 to 12 inches) will reduce disease severity. However, fungicide sprays still may be necessary.

Gray mold and leather rot are common strawberry fruit diseases in Nebraska.

Gray mold is first seen on maturing fruit that is tan or brown but still somewhat firm. Later, infected fruits collapse and rot. During humid weather, the surface of rotted fruit turns a velvety gray as a result of spores produced by the fungus.

Leather rot affects both green and ripe fruit. Lesions on immature fruits are dull brown or bleached. As the disease progresses, the entire fruit turns brown and develops a leathery texture. Affected fruits have a bitter taste.

A protective fungicide spray program, with applications on a 7 to 10 day basis during fruit maturity through harvest, using either captan plus benlate or zineb, should minimize both problems.

SPIDERS

If you're one of the thousands who are afraid of spiders, or if you're one of the tens of thousands who "merely have no use for them", the Cooperative Extension Service has a NebGuide G86-792, Spiders, that may be of interest.

In addition to the general description of spiders and their habits, the NebGuide has a section on spider control.

The five most non-poisonous spiders in Nebraska — the wolf, garden, crab, jumping and funnel-web spiders — are discussed in detail, as are the two poisonous species sometimes found in Nebraska — the black widow and the brown recluse.

"Spiders attempt to bite humans only as a last resort when threatened, injured or trapped in clothing. They prefer to retreat rather than attack, and generally will avoid contact with humans," according to the publication.

Spiders are generally considered beneficial because they consume large numbers of insects and are almost no importance as disease carriers.

The consistent presence of spiders in structures is often a sign of insect infestations since spiders could not survive long periods without food. Control efforts directed at the insects eventually should decrease or eliminate the spiders as well.

The NebGuide is available from the Wayne County Extension Office.

Duplication exists in employee law

Farmers and ranchers who are employers would have some new rules and regulations, more paperwork and higher insurance premiums if bills in the U.S. House and Senate result in a new law called "The High Risk Occupational Disease Notification and Prevention Act of 1987." This would be in addition to regulations of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

The concept was first introduced in Congress in 1986 by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) and Rep. Joseph Gaydos (D-Pa) and was quickly nicknamed the "Employee Right To Know" bill. It was modified somewhat and reintroduced in the 100th Congress and now carries bills numbers S. 79 and H.R. 162.

If enacted, the new law would establish a new five-member "Risk Assessment Board" within the Department of Health and Human Services. The board would be responsible for conducting studies and investigations to determine and identify populations of employees in any industry that it decides have been exposed to some toxic material that will likely produce serious health problems. It also has responsibility to notify affected persons.

EMPLOYERS WOULD be involved in supplying lists of current and past employees who might be affected and they would be required to pay for medical monitoring of affected current employees.

There is no exemption for agriculture, nor any exemption for employers of small numbers of workers. Approximately 750,000 farmers and ranchers who have employees would be directly affected, including those who have just one hired hand.

There's a lot wrong with this idea, particularly as it pertains to farmers and ranchers. Most obvious is that it duplicates existing and effective safeguards. OSHA, as part of the U.S. Department of Labor, already has broad authority to regulate in the field of occupational safety and health and a new agency is not needed — nor the expense of funding it.

OSHA ALREADY has promulgated regulations on employees' right to know about exposure or possible exposure to harmful substances in manufacturing and is moving to expand coverage to other industries. In addition, the Environmental Protection Agency — which regulates use of pesticides — already well along in the process of expanding the scope of its existing farmworker protection regulations. These new rules should be adequate to prevent and monitor health problems that may arise among farm workers.

Second, as the legislation is written, the Risk Assessment Board could determine a "population at risk" on the basis of a single study. This defies sound scientific principles.

Third, the proposal virtually guarantees increased liability and other costs for farmer-rancher employers, and would likely result in more lawsuits being filed against farmers.

Fourth, most agricultural employment takes place on family farms that employ fewer than 10 workers, most of them on a seasonal basis. Medical monitoring would place a heavy burden on these employers, as would the related paperwork.

It may be that "The High Risk Occupational Disease Notification and Prevention Act of 1987" has merit for other industries, but for agriculture it's unnecessary, unwieldy, costly and a bad idea.

Try cultivation

Weed control?

By Don Spitze, extension agent — In any conventional, conservation or no tillage situation, cultivation may be an excellent method of weed control.

A cultivator gives you the opportunity to control weed escapes from your herbicide program, without having to rely on postemergent herbicides. However, cultivation should only be used to control weed escapes, rebuild ridges, or aerate the soil. Cultivation for the sake of stirring the soil usually dries the soil, resulting in lower yields.

Cultivation is a good method of controlling grass and broadleaf weed escapes in a row crops. However, in a corn or grain sorghum, small broadleaf weeds may be controlled more economically with a postemergent herbicide. In soybeans, postemergent herbicide control of weeds may or may not be the most economical method. Cultivation will control in the row middles but if the weed escapes are in a row, a herbicide may still be necessary. The herbicide could be banded with the cultivator to control weeds using a combination of mechanical and chemical methods.

IN MOST OF eastern Nebraska, where moisture is usually limited during the growing season, cultivation has some disadvantages. By cultivating, drying of the soil can occur which reduces the moisture available to the growing crop. With each cultivation, from 12 to 1 inch of soil moisture may be lost. In a dry growing season, the moisture savings from not cultivating may be enough to sustain the crop through the dry period.

In a ridge-till system, two cultivations are usually necessary to rebuild the ridges for the next year. The first cultivation is a deep cultivation to control weeds, but more importantly, loosen the soil. Then the second cultivation or ditching is used to push the loose soil up to the row to form a rounded or flat topped ridge to plant into the next season. Furrowing wings should be used during the second cultivation to push the soil up to the row rather than using disk hillers which throw the soil to the row, forming a peaked ridge. The flat topped ridge will be easier to plant on next spring.

Corn and soybean seedling diseases usually can be traced to root system conditions, advised extension plant pathologist John Watkins of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Seed decay, root rots, damping-off and seedling blights are common diseases of this time of year, Watkins said. Above-ground symptoms include lack of emergence or weak, slowly growing seedlings; wilting, yellowing or dead leaves; signs of nutritional deficiency; and plant death.

"To correctly identify the problem, you must dig up the plants," Watkins said.

Soil-inhabiting fungi cause root rots, damping-off and seedling blight in corn. When infected, the seminal roots — those originated from the seed near the shoot — or the mesocotyl — the internode between the seed and the nodal roots — are brown, water-soaked and withered.

Common corn seedling diseases include Pythium, Fusarium, Diplodia, Penicillium, Helminthosporium and Rhizoctonia. Pythium-rotted roots, associated with compacted, wet seedbeds, are soft and dark-colored with few healthy root tips. Roots rotted by Diplodia are grayish-white. Firm, brown roots indicate Rhizoc-tonia, and firm, white-to-pink roots are signs of Fusarium.

SEMINAL ROOTS and mesocotyl function only until the nodal root system develops. "Plants will either die or recover when the nodal root system takes over the nutrient and water-uptake functions of the plant," Watkins said.

Pythium, Fusarium and Rhizoctonia also attack soybean seedlings, though soybean post- and pre-emergence damping-off, seedling blight, root rots and stem decay may be caused by such pathogens as Phytophthora, Diaporthe and Phomopsis.

Watery decay of the hypocotyl — the main stem, tap root section below the soil line — and cotyledons — fleshy, seed leaves — indicate Pythium. Hypocotyl and root lesions indicate Fusarium and Rhizoctonia when dry and reddish-brown, or Phytophthora when dark brown.

Diaporthe causes small reddish-brown streaks on the hypocotyl; Phomopsis causes seed decay.

A seedling disease complex has little or no impact on seedling vigor and survivability when soil and water conditions favor rapid germination and stand establishment, Watkins said.

Water, water everywhere

NO, THIS EXCESS amount of water in a field near Wayne was not caused by a leaky irrigation system. Recent heavy rains left water standing in many fields, in some cases filling the ditches and going over the road. Just how much damage the heavy rains did to this field is unknown.

Moisture creeps into grain

Now is the time to check the condition of stored grain and to remedy any temperature, moisture or insect problems, warned University of Nebraska-Lincoln extension agricultural engineer Richard Pierce.

Pierce and three other UNL grain storage specialists recently conducted spot checks on seven corn storage bins. While the grain generally was found in good condition, the samples did demonstrate the range of potential storage problems.

Moisture content in two bins exceeded the 13 percent recommended for long-term storage. The worst example was a natural air drying bin with over 18 percent moisture to the depth of 10 feet. The grain was moldy and beginning to crust at 3 feet. "Grain in this condition must be dried or moved immediately," Pierce said.

The other bin, with a moisture reading of 15.5 percent on the surface, had no visible signs of damage.

"However," Pierce said, "as outside temperatures rise, that grain could go out of condition at any time. It should be dried or moved by the end of June."

Moisture problems must be avoided or corrected, Pierce stressed. "The bottom line," he said, "is that as we go into summer, any excess moisture, anywhere in the bin, will lead to heating and mold problems."

THE UNL SPECIALIST, for example, found molding in the center and on the surface edges of a bin with otherwise acceptable moisture content. Gaps at the eave of the bin and a poor-fitting top cover allowed moisture penetration.

Extensive moisture pockets — called "hot spots" — may be eliminated by running the fan continuously until the grain is dried down, Pierce said. Smaller areas may be dried through nighttime-only fan operation.

Pierce suggested using screw-in aeration ducts to fight hot spots. "That way, you can dry grain in small areas without affecting grain elsewhere in the bin," he said.

Grain temperatures — measured 6 feet deep at the center of the bins — averaged 63 degrees F, slightly higher than the 60 degrees recommended for summer storage. Surface and sidewall temperatures averaged 70 degrees or more.

As grain temperatures increase from 60 to 85 degrees, insect activity — reproduction in particular — also increases. "In the bins we checked, the grain was relatively cool and had been treated with malathion," Pierce said. "So, in general, there were no visible insect problems."

The specialists did find Indian meal moths in one bin, however. Indian meal moths, which are resistant to malathion, create a webbed covering on the grain surface, disrupting air flow. Vapona pest strips are effective against adult moths, Pierce said, while Dipel is used against moth larvae. Malathion provides up to nine months' protection against most other insects.

"RUNNING THE fan one night per week through May and June will help maintain 60-degree temperatures throughout the grain mass," Pierce said. "Keep as much of the grain as possible at 60 degrees for as long as you can."

During May and June, nighttime temperatures of 60 degrees and under make aeration beneficial, so fan openings may be left uncovered. As outside temperatures rise, however, the cooler air will escape through fan openings and warm air under the roof will be drawn into the grain. "Covering the fan openings will eliminate this problem," Pierce said.

In general, Pierce said, "the grain we checked is in better shape than last year. We haven't seen the same number of problems as this time last year, but the potential for problems will increase directly with rising outside temperatures."

"It's important to make a thorough check of grain condition now. Don't wait until temperatures have warmed up and running the fan is no longer desirable."

'Check soil down deep'

Nitrogen management stressed

Results of a 1986 field demonstration indicate that farmers may not be efficiently utilizing all sources of nitrogen available for crop production.

Information collected at seven locations in Pierce County by University of Nebraska Cooperative Extension Service and USDA Soil Conservation Service personnel suggest that nitrogen application exceeds crop requirements by up to 150 pounds per acre on some fields. Most of the fields were not deep sampled by the farmers, to determine how much nitrogen was present in the soil prior to planting. Had samples been taken and nitrogen applied at rates to achieve a realistic yield goal, an average of 72 pounds per acre could have been saved.

At an in-depth demonstration field located southwest of Osmond on the Dennis Hoffman farm, harvested yields of 200 bushel per acre were obtained from test strips receiving 160, 225 and 290 pounds nitrogen per acre.

Charles Shapiro, Soil Fertility Specialist at the Northeast Research and Extension Center stated that the objective of the project is to demonstrate the use of deep soil sampling and a nitrogen budget to improve the nitrogen management abilities of local farmers. By accounting for nitrogen available to the crop from the soil, water and decaying plant residues, the amount of commercial fertilizer applied can often be reduced, added Shapiro.

Under irrigated conditions, a key to obtaining positive results from a nitrogen management program is to have good management of the irrigation system state Shapiro's colleague Bill Kranz. Poor management of irrigation water may force farmers to use poor nitrogen management as well. Of greater concern in the Osmond area is the rise in the nitrate concentration in the groundwater aquifer said Kranz.

"If we can help farmers improve their abilities to manage irrigation water and nitrogen inputs we hope to be able to bring the rise in nitrate concentration under control," added Kranz.

The project was funded by the Lower Elkhorn Natural Resources District and will continue on the same fields in 1987. An additional demonstration site will be located northwest of Pierce on a field farmed by Bernard Wrede. More information can be obtained by contacting the Pierce County Extension Office.

Take corrective action

Herbicide failure detected?

By Don Spitzer, extension agent
Weed emergence in fields treated preplant incorporated or preemergence is often the sign of trouble.
Has the herbicide failed or will the emerged weeds yet be controlled? Failures need to be detected early to take corrective action. On the other hand, premature corrective action wastes time and money. Evaluation depends on the herbicide, the weed and its size.

Herbicides that are primarily shoot absorbed and control weeds as the seed germinates include Dual, Lasso, Treflan, Prowl, Sonalan, Ramrod, Eradicane, Sutan Plus, Ro-Neet, Vernam and Reward. Normally weeds are controlled by these herbicides at germination and weed emergence does not occur. If weeds emerge and appear normal there is little chance they will be controlled. Prompt corrective action is needed. Occasionally weeds that emerge under cool conditions with Eradicane, Sutan Plus, Ro-Neet, Vernam and Reward are controlled if the weather warms promptly.

Several herbicides including atrazine, Bladex, Igran, Sencor, Lex, one and Lorox are root absorbed and kill weeds after they germinate and begin photosynthesis. Weed emergence followed by decline and death is normal with these herbicides. Examine fields closely as weed emergence takes place. Weeds that reach a height of one inch or greater without signs of damage are not likely to be controlled. The roots are growing down and out of the herbicide treated zone as rapidly as the tops are growing upward.
Also plants become less sensitive to the herbicide as they become larger. Don't wait for a miracle — take corrective action.

The Farmer's Wife
by Pat McHenry

No man is an island, no man stands alone
Each man's joy is joy to me,
Each man's grief is my own.
We need one another, so I will defend.

Each man as my brother, each man as my friend.
Johnnie Dunne wrote the poem; it was later put to music. Our mixed chorus got a 1 on it at music contest thirty years ago. It's still a favorite of mine.

The lines kept going through my head on Sunday night. There was a very special memorial service at Ley theater. It was a memorial to all who had died as Home Health Care patients the past five years.

Deanna Edwards says we all need to do "grief work" when we lose a loved one. There is no set way to do it, or a set time frame for it, but it must be done.

When someone dies while receiving Home Health Care, his caregiver has often begun grief work before the death. But as one husband told me, "Now it is so final. Each time we took her to the hospital, we anticipated bringing her home again. Now we cannot bring her home ever again."

Tears are a part of grief work. There were some. There were Bible readings, like the 23rd Psalm, beautiful poems, and touching songs.

The pastor spoke on the Hebrew word Shalom, which means hello, good by, and peace, all at once.
One song, Remember Me, was especially fitting. It was written by Deanna for a young foreign exchange student before she died of multiple injuries sustained in an auto accident. It could be a message from God to all of us.

"Remember me whenever you see a sunrise
Remember me whenever you see a star
Remember me whenever you see a rainbow
Or woods in autumn colors from afar.
Remember me whenever you see the roses
Or sea gulls sailing high in a sky of blue.

Remember me whenever you see waves shining in the sun,
And remember, I'll be remembering you."

What beautiful thoughts during the season of Memorial Day, the season for remembering. It's all part of our grief work.

A good friend lost a husband on May 20 17 years ago. The doctor tried to help with tranquilizers and sleeping pills.

When she remarried, she was part of a new social circle, and went from pills to alcohol. Now recovering, with the help of AA, she has lost the second husband on May 21st.

She told me, "You have to feel the pain. You may try to mask it, or postpone it, or numb it, but that's no good. You have to confront the pain, and survive it, and treasure the memories."

Sunday evening, with white candles and carnations, I participated in "each man's grief" and am stronger for it. I need to be reminded periodically to notice "the sunrise, the stars, roses, and rainbows." I did some more of my "grief work." I guess it's work we never quite get finished. Shalom.

Gains many honors
Schmitt excels in science

Tami Schmidt
In Monday's edition, The Wayne Herald published an article on Tami Schmidt winning a prestigious science honor. More details on her success in the science field were presented to this newspaper on Tuesday, and the information appears below.

Tami Schmitt, 18, daughter of Gary and Janice Schmitt of Laurel, has earned a variety of national and international honors with her individual scientific research project. Last year, as a junior at Laurel-Concord High School, Tami was selected as a presenter in the Oklahoma-Kansas-Nebraska Regional Junior Science and Humanities Symposium held in Lawrence, Kansas.

As one of the top five papers, Tami qualified to attend the national competition in Raleigh, North Carolina. Also, last year she won the regional Northeast Nebraska Junior Academy of Science Symposium held at Wayne State College.

She qualified to compete at the state level at Nebraska Wesleyan, and received the top paper in the state of Nebraska, qualifying to attend the National American Junior Academy of Science Symposium held in Chicago, Illinois.

This year, Tami not only won the regional Wayne Fair and the state fair in Lincoln, which qualifies her to attend nationals in Boston, Massachusetts next February, but she won the three state regional fair in Kansas and represented Kansas-Nebraska-Oklahoma at the National Junior Academy of Science Symposium in West Point, New York.

FROM OVER 40 presentors representing the 48 states, the U.S. territories and Europe, Tami was one of only seven students to qualify for the London International Science Youth Forntight. She also won regional competition of the Greater Nebraska Science and Engineering Fair conducted in Nebraska City, Nebraska.

She qualified for international competition in San Juan, Puerto Rico. In competition with 600 students from nearly 20 countries, Tami received the first place paper in the zoology division from the U.S. navy; first place from the U.S. Army and a chance to visit an Army research station for a week this summer; alternate to the Department of Energy Youth Science Institute; and second place in overall International Science and Engineering Fair judging in the zoology division.

She has been conducting her research in an Independent Science Research class at Laurel-Concord High School, under the direction of Ed Brogie. The class is designed to introduce exceptional science/math students to a wide variety of scientific fields as well as allowing them to conduct research in the areas of their interests.

BROGIE HAD recently been awarded the Outstanding Science Instructor Award in Nebraska-Kansas-Oklahoma for his outstanding teaching abilities; and much of Tami's success can be attributed to his scientific guidance and expertise as well as the science curriculum at Laurel.

Tami's project, entitled "The Effects of Low-Level Exposure to Environmental Aluminum on the Mosquitofish (Gambusia affinis affinis) Through the Analysis of Reproductive Behavior and Isolating Sexually Dimorphic Male Behavior", has been a three year study.

The research involved exposing male and female Gambusia to low levels of naturally occurring levels of aluminum in a static assay and then observing established behavior patterns of the fish to determine possible deviations in the ethological activity of the exposed fish.

Because her research found significant differences between the behavior of those male and female Gambusia exposed to low levels of aluminum and control fish, it can be hypothesized that subsequent neurological damage in sex-specific areas of the brain may be occurring.

Tami is currently attending summer classes at Wayne State College and will be traveling to London, England for two weeks in July for the International Youth Science Forntight as well as visiting an Army Research Station in either Maryland or Virginia.

This fall, Tami will be a Neihardt Scholar at Wayne State College, where she will be majoring in Chemistry and Biology.

She plans to continue her research at the undergraduate level and then attend graduate school to eventually do research in the area of environmental toxicology.

The Golden Years
by Gil Haase

According to research at the Boston University Gerontology Center, by the year 2000 more than 11 million people in the United States will be 75 or older and 3.8 million will be 85 or older. That's more than three times the over-75 population in 1977. In summarizing the report, Laura Fried of Bostonia magazine wrote: "Once we envision the elderly as the way they really are — productive and with much to contribute to their large and small societies — we can place gerontology and geriatrics in more central positions in health care, where they belong."

New evidence reported by the American Optometric Association shows that exposure to a certain type of ultraviolet radiation in sunlight can cause cataracts, while another type can cause serious damage to the retina; sunglasses screen out or absorb varying amounts of this radiation. "When choosing sunglasses," said the association report, "older adults should be certain lenses are dark enough to screen out 75 to 90 percent of available light." AOA warned, however, that sunglasses should not be worn indoors and never when driving at night.

Pre-arrange your funeral today as a gift of love for tomorrow.

Today, many people recognize the importance of estate planning. Wills and life insurance help ensure the financial and emotional well-being of survivors in the event of our death.

Through funeral planning in advance of need, and often pre-financing, many questions about death and funerals can be answered, and some of the problems associated with death can be minimized. For some people, planning in advance gives assurance of a funeral that will represent their personal beliefs or lifestyles. For others, it is a way to help their families deal knowledgeably with their death.

If you would like to discuss pre-planning or pre-financing for a funeral, contact your local Funeral Director. He will be glad to answer these questions and any other questions you might have.

A good cause

FIVE BICYCLERS participated in the St. Jude's Wheels for Life benefit on Saturday and raised $151 for the St. Jude program. According to Gail Addison, all of the bikers did an excellent job. Winning the 10 speed bike, donated by Pamida, was Terry Hamer, son of Tim and Mary Hamer, who rode 28 miles. Aaron Peirce, son of David and Belinda Peirce, won the fishing rod combo contributed by Pamida for his ride of 26 miles. David Curley also rode 26 miles. Heath DeWald, son of Barb and Jean DeWald, rode 20 miles and Jeff Hamer, brother of Terry, rode 12 miles. From left are Aaron Peirce, Terry Hamer and Heath DeWald. Dave Loose, Pamida manager, poses with the benefit participants.

NPPD fined for violating standards

The Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) has agreed to pay a $9,000 fine as a result of violations of Nebraska air quality regulations at the Gerald Gentleman electrical generating station Unit I (GGSI), Sutherland.

State and federal regulations require large fossil fuel burning facilities such as GGSI to continuously monitor and record the opacity of emissions. Opacity is the amount of light blocked by the exhaust plume from an emission source. A report must be submitted to the NDEC quarterly listing each instance when the opacity standard was exceeded during that quarter.

Eighteen days during April, May and June, 1986, GGSI exceeded the opacity standard, according to NPPD's quarterly report. During those 18 days, the average opacity ranged from 24 to 31 percent, compared to the standard of 20 percent.

Gerald Gentleman's Unit I uses an electrostatic precipitator to control particulate emissions. Other power plants with similar equipment in Nebraska and other states have also experienced problems complying with the opacity standard, according to Gene Robinson, NDEC Air Quality Division Chief.

"When the Gerald Gentleman plant was constructed, electrostatic precipitators were considered state-of-the-art for control of particulate emissions," said Robinson. "Although the GGSI has twice demonstrated compliance with the standard for the amount of particulate matter being emitted, the unit has always had difficulty complying with the opacity standard," he said.

"NPPD has made various changes in the precipitator and added sodium to the fuel to make the precipitator perform better. The number of excess opacity episodes since the second quarter of 1986 has been reduced considerably, so some of NPPD's efforts toward improved precipitator collection efficiency appear to have been successful," said Robinson.

A second power generating unit at the Gerald Gentleman plant has not had as much difficulty meeting the opacity standard, according to Robinson.

The maximum penalty in Nebraska for such violations is $500 per day.
