Tillage tour scheduled

A Wayne County Conservation Tillage Tour In the Hoskins area is being planned for Tuesday, June 23 ng at 1:30 p.m., announced Don-itze, Wayne County extension

C. Spitze, Wayne County extension agent.
One of the highlights of the tour is a field that has been planted to corn continuously for 20 years, using a ridge-till plant system. This is on the Harold Wittler farm northeast of Hoskins. Wittler reports that this field now has less weeds, better soil tilth, reduced soil erosion, at less cost—and at the same time equals or exceeds yields of conventionally planted corn.
The tour is sponsored by the Wayne County Extension Service and includes the following four stops:

*First stop, Harold Wittler field—Four miles east of Hoskins on rust supp, maroid Wittler field — Four miles east of Hoskins on Highway 35 and 374 miles north. To be seen will be a field that has been in corn for 20 consecutive years using conservation tillage (Buffalo System).

Second stop, Don Johnson no-till corn field — One mile east of Hoskins on Highway 35 and two miles north and-a-quarter-mile west. No-till corn into alfalfa sod.

•Third stop, Don Johnson corn field no-till continuous corn — One mile east of Hoskins on Highway 35, then five miles north and ½ miles west.

Fourth stop, Randy Wagner field soil erosion demonstration — One mile east of Hoskins on Highway 35 then six miles north and 1½ miles west. There will be a demonstration of a Rotary Boom Rainfall Simulator that simulates heavy rainfall on soil with different amounts of cover so a farmer can visually measure amounts of soil erosion in a few minutes.

Also, there will be a demonstration on setting corn planters for conserva-tion tillage, and the use of fertilizer and herbicide for conservation tillage.

District 17 figures found A budget of long ago

Very soon, members of the Wayne-Carroll School District 17 board of directors will be deciding on a budget for the upcoming school year. Some 96 years ago, another board of education was dealing with budget figures. Obviously, the numbers have changed significantly. Bob Boeckenhauer happened to find some information about the budget of District No. 17 in 1891.

On July 2, 1891, W.C. Wightman, director of District 17, had submitted to the county superintendent of schools his annual report for the year ending July 13, 1891.

Here are some highlights of that report.

all other sources, $295.82; total money received $7,110,96.

EXPENDITURES included: paid male teachers, $900; paid female teachers, $2,157.15; paid for building school house, $702.81; paid for books, maps, etc., $851.87; paid for building school house, $702.81; paid for books, maps, etc., $851.87; paid for all other purposes, $360; total paid out, $4,971.83.

On Monday, July 13, 1891, there was no indebtedness except $45 that was due one teacher.

The names of each qualified teacher, days taught, wages per month and total amount paid are as follows:

8. W. Ashley, 180 days, $100 per month, $900 per school year; Jessie Craig, 180 days, $45 per month, $495 per year; Saille Cenner and Anne Cenner, 180 days, $45 per month, $495 per year, Ambel King, 180 days, $45 per month, $495 per year, and Minnie Sprague, 180 days, $55 per month, $495 per year.

Other facts and figures show there were 186 male and 188 female children in the district; there was one frame school house and the length of the school term was nine months.

The value of the school house was at $6,000, with a $5,000 value on the site and $200 for the value of the charts and other assets.

There were nearly 371 total pupils taught for a total expenditure of $5,016.83, or an average of $13.52 per pupil. Six teachers taught about 371 pupils, which averages 62 pupils per leacher. The tax levy for the year 1891-92 was 25,mills.

OFFICERS FOR the coming year were: W.C. Wightman, director; P.M. Corbit, moderator; E.J. Nangle, treasurer; and J.J. Gildersleeve was the county superintendent.
Boeckenhauer said Wightman was Debble Ensz's grandfather, P.M. Corbit was Joe Corbit's grandfather and E.J. Nangle was Ralph Beckenhauer's grandfather.
J.J. Gildersleeve was an uncle of Helen Gildersleeve.

Lack of Vitamin A drastic

The link between vitamin A and bilindness has been known for many years. The link between vitamin A and other diseases has long been suspected, but there has been little scientific proof - up until now. There is dramatic new evidence that lack of vitamin A kills millions of the world's children every year. This is because vitamin A deficiency contributes to measles, repliratory diseases, diarrhea, and other illnesses which can be fatal in developing nations.

Research by Dr. Al Sommer of Johns Hopkins University shows that vitamin A treatments for children in developing nations can cut child death rates by an estounding 70%. And, last month, the World Health Otganization and UNICEF Issued a loint statement recommending vitamin A to reduce measles.

Since 1985, the House Select Committee on Hunger, on which I serve, as led the effort in Congress to sup-diseases which strike down children in developing nations. It is cheap—a six-month dose contained in one cap sule costs less than 2 cents. And, it is easy to administer without complicated knowledge or technology. It would be hard to find a more effective use of our money to reduce child deaths from disease.

Here in the United States, Vitamin. A deficiently is necessity or as a

Here in the United States, vitamin A deficiency is generally not a problem. Milk and margarine are routinely fortified with vitamin A. It is found naturally in liver and eggs, and in dark yellow and green vegetables such as squash, carrots, and spinach. In many developing countries similar vegetables are the major sources of vitamin A. Unfortunately, many children in developing nations are not given these foods and can easily become vitamin A deficient. The World Health Organization estimates that 500,000 children are blinded by worldwide.

Now we must determine the best methods for getting vitamin A to the people who need it. In some countries, it will mean fortifying flour or salt or milk with vitamin A. In other countries it will mean handing out capsules or giving doses of vitamin A liquid. Still, in other places, it will be primarily by encouraging mothers to feed their children foods such as the vegetables that are actually high in vitamin A.

Overhaul unnecessary

A regulation to require farmers hauling their crops to obtain a commercial trucking license has been proposed.

The proposed Federal Highway Administration regulation that would take effect July 1 would require all drivers of trucks weighing over 26,000 pounds (such as straight trucks) to have commercial licenses.

It would require all states to adopt the uniform standard by 1991 or lose some federal highway dollars. The regulation does allow for waivers.

Evidently, this regulation is one that will have a definite impact on farm harvesting. According to a spokesman at Feeders Elevator in Wayne, that weight classification would cover approximately 50 percent of the farmers who use trucks to haul their grain.

A call to the treasurer's office reveals that there is no additional fee for adding the farmer to the commercial license class on the drivers license.

class on the drawer's office reveals that there is no additional fee for adding the farmer to the commercial license class on the drivers license.

But the procedure in obtaining the license is probably what irks most grain haulers. Current procedure for those wishing to obtain a commercial license to drive the large semi trucks requires first a physical; then a written test from information from a truck driving book that is separate from automobile testing material; and finally it requires bringing a truck to the test site for a driving test.

The spokesman from the local treasurer's office said that years ago, there was an individual classification for people driving straight trucks — vehicles that weighed over 12,000 pounds. But that classification was eliminated long ago.

Said one Federal Highway official: "It seems ludicrous to me that if you get a license to drive a Volkswagen you should be able to drive an 80,000-pound truck. A truck is a truck and weight is weight. The law should apply to all uses of the local system."

Was the federal highway official saying that those who [roads] system."

Was the federal highway official saying that those who drive Volkswagons (or other automobiles) do not have the skills to drive a big truck?

Some farmers drive their trucks more than they do their family car. We question the necessity of this regulation at the present time.

Perhaps testing would weed out the unskilled and unexperienced straight truck drivers who are a hazard on the highways. It would be illegal to have those who are underage out on the highway driving a straight truck.

But without good law enforcement, would a commercial license stop these violations from constantly occurring?

If straight truck drivers must have commercial licenses, then let's go all out and require a commercial operator's license for tractors pulling wagons of soybeans; or cars,

Refinancing for borrowers introduced

I recently introduced legislation that will allow rural electric and telephone borrowers to prepay and refinance their long-term, high-interest loans held by the federal government. This arrangement puts the borrowers and the federal government in a "no lose" situation: the borrowers will be able to seek private funds, borrowed at lower interest rates, to pay off the loans at 100 cents to the dollar to the federali government.

rural America remain stable and competitive is one way to assuage this ecomonic crisis. Rural electric and telephone systems operate on loans from the federal financing bank. About $10 billion worth of those loans are locked into long-term interest rates ranging form 8.5 percent to over 15 percent. The U.S. Congress has repeatedly expressed its support for a policy that would allow the rural systems to prepay and refinance their high-interest loans without penalty.

Supplying electricity to rural areas has been a difficult task. Rural electric systems serve more that 25 million citizens, but average only five customers per mile of line. For rural areas, with electricity and

The Congress has repeatedly endorsed the policy of the Rural Electric Refinancing Act, and we have gathered 41 senate cosponsors to this legislation which I am confident will pass. Rural America deserves the benefits of low interest rates. It Is indeed rare that the government can simutaneously aid rural America and reduce the budget deficit.

Ask A Lawyer

Q. A farm owner dies and his will states that his wife is to receive his property. The will states that following his wife's death, the farm is to be sold and proceeds are to be divided among the four children. The wife is now 80 years old and in fair health. She wonders if in the event of allong term disabiling illness would she be required to sell the farm and use up the proceeds to pay for her care before she could apply for public assistance. If so, are there steps she could or should take at this time, to protect the tarin?

A. It appears from the way your question is worded that the farm owener gave his wife what is called a "life estate" in the farm. The recipient of a life estated one son treatly own the property; he or she merely has the use of it during his or her lifetime. The wife has no power to sell the farm. Therefore, the normal rules that apply to property owners and their creditors would probably not apply to the situation you describe.

Normally, if a property owner incurs bills such as those that might result from long-term health care, he would be required to pay them out of his assets — cash, personal property or real estate holdings. If the bills exceed his amount of cash, the debtor's personal property and real estate holdings could be sold to satisfy his creditors.

In the situation you describe, the wife does not own the farm. She has only a life estate in it. Therefore only the net income earned during the wife's life would be subject to the demands of creditors. Upon her death the proceeds of a sale would go the children.

Out Of Old Nebraska

First paved highways in Nebraska

Pacific, the first of the trans-western railroads, are examples of our importance as a highway.

It is only reasonable that Nebraska should have been one of the states that experimented early with im-proving rural roads and paving highways for automobile traffic. Nebraska started this activity almost as soon as the automobile started to become important early. In this cen-tury. Before 390 This weads of the state had been built solely for local wagon traffic and they had little organized planning behind their construction. They followed section lines or they ran through poor land more or less at whim. The practice of working out road taxes rather than payng them in cash was wide spread, and road construction and repair was intermittant at best. But with the coming of the automobile interest in roads increased in the state, and in 1911 the state passed its first legislation to improve the roads-a state bridge act. Even with state support Nebraska did not empark on a road building program quickly. Rather the state for a number of years put little money into improving road surfaces, rather if graded all of the roads possible, aiming to surface them in the tuture.

While the state government did not groups, especially the Lincoln Highway Association did. Feeling that a few seedling sections (mile sections of concrete highway along the roads across the state) would be splendid object lessons to car owners teaching the benefits to be gained from good roads. On this seedling program a mile section of paved highway was completed near Grand Island in November, 1915, and shortly after another mile was finished near Kearney. A longer seedling section was a six mile strip near Fremont paved in 1916. The Fremont section, as the first tow, was sponsored by the Lincoln Highway Association, but at the same time it was one of the first stretches of road in the country completed under the provisions of the federal aid road act of 1916.

This act was the beginning of the federal highway system and of federal matching funds to help build highways. It also marked the return of the nation's attention to and concern about through highways as a part of national defense and for the nations well being.

From the middle of the 19th century until 1916 the federal government had concentrated its attention on assisting railroads. With—the beginning of the federal highway ald in 1916, and continuing to the present in the interstate highway system the federal government as well as state governments has emphasized

Steroid side effects unknown

After the much publicized disqualification of U.S. athletes at the 1983 Pan American Games, steroid use in athletes has received much attention. Its use continues despite the known side effects, some of which may take 15-20 years to develop. The problem continues to grow.

Anabolic steroids have been used in one form or another since the late 50's. Common trade names DIANABOL. DURABOLIN, and WINSTROL were used initially to prevent muscle wasting in certain diseases and post-operative disuse atrophy. Within 10 years the use of anabolic steroids spread into the athletic population with the claim of enhancing performances, strength and muscular size. Today, numerous medical societies report that 99 percent of male and 10 percent of female body builders have used steroids. cent of male and 10 percent of female body builders have used steroids. The lowest estimates of national-caliber athletes across the board is 5-10 percent.

In a study by Moore in the Journal of the Physician and Sports Medicine in 1981, nearly 36 percent of U.S. athletes obtained their steroids from a licensed physician. Approximately 50 percent obtained their steroids from illegal sources. The remaining 15 percent obtained their steroids from illegal sources. The remaining 15 percent obtained the medication from their athletic trainer or local pharmacists.

Steroids are altered forms of the hormone. Testosterone, and are responsible for the male secondary sex characteristic. Ilbido and behavior. At the cell level of the muscle, this hormone acts on the DNA to increase protein synthesis. It is this effect combined with heavy resistance training that is thought to increase muscular growth. Frequently athletes report less farique their athletic performance.

As a general rule, the scientific literature does agree that anabolic steroids in high does and in combination with high resistance training will lead to an increase in body weight and muscular size. This increase in motor strength. This is not to say that steroids promote better coordination or skill in a particular sport, in fact, steroids may actually decrease performances in sports in which speed, quickness and agility are important.

Although, the risk-benefit controversy remains, one fact is certain-steroids are dangerous! Any dose can prove harmful; however, the large doses surally produce the majority of the side effects. Average doses for men range between 150 mg, per day, often increasing to 200 mg, per day, when preparing for competition. The female doses are usually smaller and range between 50-75 mg, per day. The normal therapeutic dose per kilogram of body weight is approxmately ,5 to 1 mg. (35-75 mg, per day).

are discontinued. However, some athletes suffer permanent liver damage and are predisposed to liver cancer, in male athletes androgenic steroids often lead to smaller testes and decreased testes. and decreased testosterone.
The effect upon sexual druve with slightly more athletes ha increased drive than decreased drive than decreased.

Female athletes experience menstual irregularities, acne and masculinization (male characteristics). Females may actually benefit the most from steroids due to the very low levels of androgenic hormones:

A more serious risk is that of premature coronary artery disease and increased risk of heart attacks. This is associated with the depressed levels of High Density Lipo Proteins (HDL) and increased levels of cholesterol. Significant effects may not be discovered for 15-20 years.

Adolescent athletes may suffer any of the known side effects. They also may have grown abnormalities and stunting secondary to premature fusion of the epiphyseal growth plates. After a careful evaluation of the risks and benefits of steroidal therapy, we hope you choose against such use. If steroids are to be used, they should be done only under the supervision of a licensed physician. Have a Sportsmedictine question? There is also some growth stress seen in the pastures of this area, he mentioned. "June is usually the peak period for brome grasses," he said.
Regarding livestock, Spitze said those animals such as hogs in continement setups need to have fans and water on them. "You need to keep them cool," he said.

WITH THE INCREASED usage of fans and air conditioners, the city of Wayne has already been under a energy peak alert.
Prior to Tuesday, only businesses were notified to cut down on the energy consumption. On Tuesday afternoon, the word came over the city's public address system asking the Wayne city residents to reduce their consumption of electricity and water usage.

"Hopefully, we'll have the same cooperation as in the past," said Wayne City! Administrator Phil Kloster.

Kloster.

The peak alert system has been effective for the past four or five years—and cooperation has been good for the four to six hour periods on days when the peak alert system has been put into action.

Kloster said the initial move, when the demand for power reaches over 8,400 kilowatts per hour, is to call the local radio station (KTCH) to announce that the peak alert is in effect.

local radio station (KTCH) to announce that the peak alert is in effect.

Then, calls are made through the Wayne Chamber of Commerce Hotline to various Chamber member businesses, asking that energy consumption be reduced. Calls are made personally to the larger consumers of power in Wayne, Kloster said.

The public address system is used if the kilowatts are "still hovering at a level too high for the system," he added.

Kloster said the average demand a level too high for the system," he added.

Kloster said the average demand of kilowatts per hour, on a normal summer day, is around 7,200.
During the peak alerts, residents are also asked to conserve water usage — such as in the areas of watering lawns, washing cars. "It takes energy to pump the water," Kloster mentioned.
The city has not gone to the practice of cutting down the voltage of power from between 2 percent to 5 percent, as was recommended by a consultant during the last city council meeting, But it is a possibility that the procedure will be used in the future, according to Kloster.

BACTERIA WILT OF CUCUMBERS

BACTERIA WILT OF CUCUMBERS

When cucumbers begin to run; gardeners often notice individual leaves with evere wilt symptoms during sunny days. Within a week or two, the condition preads to the entire plant.

This disease, bacteria willt, is especially common on cucumbers and cansloupes, but it can, also occur on squash and pumpkin (only rarely on atermelons).

Where does the bacteria come from?

The bacteria overwinters in the bodies of striped cucumber beetles. In the pring the beetles emerge from the ground and begin feeding, thus introducing acteria into the leaves and stem. The bacteria multiply in the water conducing vessels, producing gurns that interfere with water transport. The beetles and bacteria are so intimately related that controlling the beetles will prevent fection by the bacteria.

MULCHING TOMATOES

Mulch can be applied around tomato plants after the middle of June, or about the time the first fruits are forming. (Mulching too early in the spring will keep the soil cool, resulting in stow growth and shallow rooting.) Apply at least 2 inches of organic mulches such as straw, compost or dried grass clippings. Frest grass clippings can be applied in shallow layers to encourage drying rather than heating. An additional layer of three to four sheets of black and white newsprint underneath the organic mulch is an excellent weed barrier.

MOWING HEIGHTS FOR LAWNS

As temperature gets higher, It's time to raise your mower height also. Raise the cutting height to 21/2 inches to 3 inches for Kentucky bluegrass lawns and 3 inches to 3 1/2 inches for a fall tescue lawn. The higher mowing heights will maintain more vegetation and insulate the crown of the grass plant from high temperature stress. The higher cutting heights should also be maintained in shaded areas. This maintains more leaf surface to catch the limited light energy in these areas.

Farmers who are eligible for a refund for petroleum products purchased between August 1973 and January 1981 can obtain a copy of the refund application from Wayne County Farm Bureau at 100 South Pearl Street In Wayne.

At least $1.5 billion is available in the Oil Overcharge Fund, 'said Donald Liedman, Wayne County Farm Bureau president. The fund was a condition of the settlement between the government and certain energy companies which charged more than allowed during the 1973-1981 period when crude oil was under government price controls.

Because It costs the U.S. Treasury, 515 to issue a getind check, no refunds under that amount will be issued. Liedman said, A farmer would need to have purchased approximately 19,000 gallons of petroleum products to reach the minimum. "Anyone who farms at

"Nothing is a better judge of forage quality than the measurements of how much of a given forage the cow will consume and how much milk she produces as a result." Kubik said.

MEASURING forage quality by feeding it to a cow is not an efficient approach to the problem for several reasons; it is expensive, time consuming, large quantities of sample are required, and it is impractical when buying or selling forages, Kubik said.

A NEW TERM, called relative f

Some people think the best way to get ahead in agriculture these days is to get out. Fortunately, there are people like my son-in-law who saw farming as a good opportunity. So he left a good job in San Francisco to come to lowa and start a farrow-to-finish hog operation.

He's never farmed before, so he's got a lot to learn. But he'll make it, for several reasons:

He can buy good-quality machinery second-hand that is well worth the money. This reduces his up-front capital expenses substantially, and frees up money for other uses.

He also bought a small farm to go along with the land I rented him. This makes good sense. It didn't take much in the way of a down payment, and farmland — which has gone down of percent in the least five years — is sure to soon regain some of its lost when 63 percent in the last tive years — is; sure to soon regain some of its least value.

The feed to livestock ratios are also the best since I started farming more than 45 years ago. For example, the com-hog ratio is now better than 30-to-1, when 15-to-1 is the break-even noint.

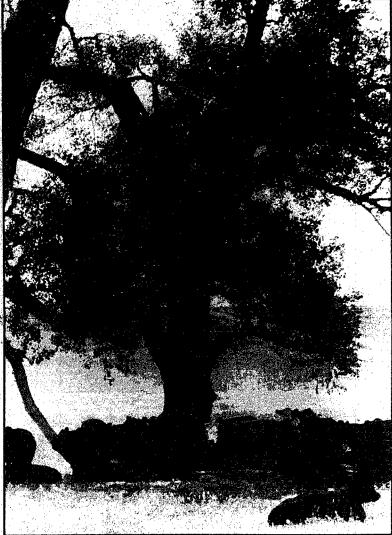

com-hog ratio is now better than 30-to-1, when 15-to-1 is the break-even point.

Cattle numbers also are at a new low. We have 30 million less cattle today than we had only 10 years ago. And if we increase cattle numbers in the next 10 years as rapidly as we reduced them in the past, we'll need to cut cattle slaughter by about 15 percent. This will buoy up the price of beef, and should give a window for hogs and poultry, for quite some time.

Plus, lower energy costs and interest rates — which are now half what they were five years ago — will reduce expenses and the cost of money. This helps farmers more than other businesses because agriculture is so capital intensive.

Never before have farmers had so many opportunities. I'm excited about the future for farming, if people think it's time to get out of farming, that's their problem. But it's good to know there are people like my son-in-law who believe agriculture's cup is half full. not half emntv.

There is a popular craft around called counted cross stirch. You see it in boutiques and all over. I think it's addictive. I work with two women who are addicted and they keep trading patterns. One of them made a picture for my wall that features a cute old-fashioned house and a car leaving it. It says. "I owe, I owe, so off to work! go."

Yonne Wittler taught Kay to do counted cross stitch a long time ago, and she has a lot of fun with it. She gave me a sampler for my birthday and it says, "dull women have immaculate homes." There is a cute lifting all in jeans with an apron and She's just trying to cheer me up because I didn't do any spring cleaning. My mom has an Immaculate house and she's far from dull.

We've been talking about house cleaning at work. The concensus is that nurses don't like It. Several of them would rather pay someone to clean for them and work at the hospital to pay for it.

They pay well, too, like $4 or $5 an hour. I've been asking around about housekeeping help and what they make. It's interesting.

The friend we stayed with in Chicago used to be an activity director at a near-by nursing home. Since the first of the year, she's been clean-

Pork check-off currently getting passing grade

Pork industry leaders are viewing with cautious optimism an independent research study conducted in May that indicates the new national 100 percent legislative checkoff-poram is generally well accepted by producers. The phone survey of 500 randomly selected pork producers from all over the nation also indicated a national producer referendum on the checkoff, if held now, would be approved handly.

The survey was conducted by Wiese Research Associates, inc. of Omaha, for the National Pork Producers Council. Producers who took part in the study were selected to participate in the aday and the survey were obtained from the subty well accepted by geographic area and size of hog operation to represent current in against it, and five percent said they haven't yet made up their mind whether to vote for continuing the checkoff when the referendum is held.

UNDER THE federal law that UNDER THE federal law that established the national checkoff, which went into effect Nov. 1, 1986, a producer referendum must be held late next year or in early 1989 to determine whether the checkoff should continue. No firm referendum date has been set. A simple majority of those voting in the referendum would be required for continuance of the national checkoff.

Tom Wiese, president of the research company that conducted the producer attitude study, noted that at the time it was conducted in early May, hogs were selling at $55-plus per hundredweight, and that may have distorted the result to some decree.

Colon. The fertilizer-need program, which lessens the environmental impact of excessive fertilizer use on the state's water quality as well as saving farmers' dollars, was initiated as the "UNL Soil Comparison Study" by agronomy professor emeritus Robert Olson in 1973. Additional experiments on fertilizer-use were conducted, starting in 1974, by UNL staffers George Rehm, Ken Frank, Phil Grabouski and Louis Daigger at the Concord, Clay Center, North Platte and Sidney research-extension plots. Those long-term studies snowed UNL's lower fertilizer recommendations to be economically sound. The average annual fertilizer recommendations of four commercial labs ranged from $46 to $55 per acre, while UNL's average $25 per acre, where the second of a "sufficiency concept." The UNL studies comparing the two concepts showed essentially no yield differences between treatments, despite the wide range of fertilizer recommended.

While the total economic value of the program can only be estimated, a 10 percent to 15 percept program effectiveness would represent an annual savings of about $100 million to Nebrask afarmers.

As one local agricultural extension agent explained, a $20 per acre reduction in fertilizer bills in his country alone could result in $2 million in annual savings.

"This program has probably received its greatest acclaim at the national level rather than within Nebrasks." Culcas said.

"It is an outstanding example of land grant university coordinated research and extension activities. The program has had a significant impact on Nebraska agriculture," he said.

Asthma Relief

Four thousand persons die of asthma each year, a condition defined as "a reversible obstruction of the airways." Although we do not always know the exact arrways. Although we do not always know the exact causes of asthma, we are familiar with certain fac-tors in the environment which can trigger asthmatic attacks in some persons (dust, pollen, smoke, foods, and drugs including aspirin).

There are two ways to deal with asthma: prevent attacks and treat attacks with medicines. Asthma prevention involves avoiding environmental factors that can cause attacks. Some experts also advise asthma sufferers to (1) avoid sitting in front of air conditioners, (2) not use perfumes, (3) participate in low-ventilation type exercises such as swimming, and (4) avoid excessive stress.

Drugs which enlarge the airway passages (bronchodilators) are frequently used to treat and prevent attacks. One of the most popular medicines used for this purpose is theophylline. Steroid medicines such as prednisone and beclomethasone are used to decrease lung inflammation. And a variety of other drugs, such as antibiotics and antianxiety agents, are valuable in certain situations.
