Couple sues

A Winside couple is suing Sears, Southern Hills Mall of Sioux City and a Sioux City construction company, claiming negligence caused the woman to fall and break her hip on the sidewalk outside of Sears. It was reported in Friday's Sioux City Journal.

The federal lawsuit was filed in U.S. District Court in Sioux City by Irene Johanna Bowers and her husband, Bernie Bowers of Winside. They are seeking an unspecified amount of damages from Equitable Life Insurance Society of the United States — a New York Corporation doing business as Southern Hills Mall; Sears Roebuck and Co.; and Chris Hansen Construction Co., according to the Journal report.

The couple claims that the defendants were negligent and careless in failing to maintain the sidewalk and not warning customers of the damaged portion, and that the construction company was negligent in its construction of the sidewalk.

Irene is seeking compensation for the injuries and disability sustained. Her husband is also asking for compensation for being deprived of his wife's aid, services, support, affection, society and companionship, according to the Journal story.

Conway stop

Senator Gerald Conway will speak to the Farm Bureau members at a supper meeting on Monday, Sept. 7, 6:30 p.m. at the Allen Farm Bureau office.

This is the annual policy development meeting, held every year to give Farm Bureau members an opportunity to draft resolutions on issues on the county, state and national levels. The members will vote on the resolutions at the county annual meeting in Allen sometime during October.

Conway has been invited to address the group about key bills that he sees being considered in the forthcoming legislative session of the Nebraska Legislature. There will be an opportunity for the members to discuss and ask questions about these bills before they draft resolutions concerning them.

Fire call

The Wayne Volunteer Fire Department was called to the Marty and Sheryl Summerfield residence in Wayne early Wednesday evening.

Early indications are that a malfunction in the furnace was the cause of the fire. Smoke had infiltrated the household and smoke damage did occur.

No Monday paper

The Wayne Herald will not be published over the upcoming Labor Day Weekend.

Hemp watch

Hemp, dogbane, a perennial yield-reducing weed, is best controlled in corn and sorghum in late August into September.

"Corn in the brown silk and milo in the soft dough stages can safely be treated," said Alex Martin, University of Nebraska-Lincoln extension weed specialist.

After pod set in any adjacent soybean fields is complete, drift effects on soybeans will be minimal, he said. "It is important to treat before the dogbane leaves yellow or a frost occurs."

Hemp dogbane can cause up to a 40 percent yield reduction in sorghum and a 10 percent to 15 percent reduction in irrigated corn.

Ombudsman program gives youngsters a chance for self-esteem

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

It is not an unknown fact that elementary to junior high students can get entangled into the web of physical and character destruction that drugs and alcohol can bear.

During the ESU One and Wayne-Carroll Educational Workshop Friday afternoon, speaker Barbara Ludwick was explaining the National Diffusion Network Ombudsman Program. The workshop participants were lined up in a circle with everyone holding hands in the center of the circle — although nobody could hold hands with the person next to them.

The task was to get untangled from the circle without breaking the grip of the hand-hold. Doing so involved teamwork and thinking on everyone's part. The activity was performed without error.

It was a lesson in self-worth, group interaction, problem solving and decision-making. But the real lesson is that the activity, when implemented with grades 5 through 9, would become a self-esteem builder and an alternative to taking drugs or alcohol.

Ludwick mentioned that throughout her previous years of teaching in York, she has seen students who have sifted through the middle school without being able to identify the problems of chemical dependency.

Years ago, people didn't think that elementary or middle school students had to be told about alcohol or chemical abuse.

"The sooner our younger people get information and preventive action is taken, or they gain knowledge [on drugs or alcohol abuse], the better it is," said Ludwick.

OMBUDSMAN is a primary drug abuse prevention program designed for students in grades 5-9. Ludwick said the program's goal is to prevent drug abuse by moving the students from a "high risk state."

Symptoms of high risk state can be that the student is rebellious; has negative social attitudes, low valuing — of school, poor student/teacher relationships, family incohesiveness and low self-esteem and attitudes favoring drug use.

Alternatives must be presented to show there are other ways to fulfill needs so that the students can be moved from the high risk state.

Once students reach the high risk state, development of the student can stop. Ludwick said the student will mature physically, but will find it difficult to mature psychologically, emotionally and socially.

Ombudsman is specifically a prevention program. Stages represented can include prevention, some intervention and referral to treatment. Schools can be everything, Ludwick said.

"But schools are ideal for prevention because the kids are all there. And the teachers are all professionally trained people," Ludwick said.

INTERVENTION can also be part of the school in certain cases, although "it can get sticky legally." "However, school systems are not qualified to do the treatment," she mentioned.

The Ombudsman program, although certified by the U.S. Department of Education and is labeled as "a drug abuse prevention program that works", needs something else to assure some sort of success ratio.

"It would be hard to do anything in the school without community support," mentioned Ludwick.

Ludwick said it is no longer sufficient to teach only the facts about alcohol and drugs, although there are more facts being issued than 10 years ago.

"The Ombudsman program is based on learning by doing. It will show that the kids are alright and can feel good about themselves," she remarked.

Teachers are the key people in the Ombudsman program, which at the minimum is implemented twice a week during the course of a semester. "We recommend that activities be done [in the Ombudsman program] twice a week."

GUIDELINES and other information regarding the program are distributed to teachers, nurses or administrators who have gone through the Ombudsman training.

Qualifications needed to coordinate the program are: good eye contact, honesty and openness, a good communicator, not afraid of self-disclosure, not judgmental, a good listener, comfortable with experimental activities, flexible in leadership and to enjoy the students.

The Ombudsman program is divided into three phases: self-awareness (geared toward self-esteem and self-evaluation); communications and group skills (emphasis on communications, group interaction, refusal skills, problem solving and decision-making); and project and outreach (which brings the first two together in reaching out to others in a creative and constructive way — to become an "Ombudsman" to others.

Research has shown that the Ombudsman program graduates are more likely to report that they "no longer use drugs" than those students who have never taken the program.

And the program has proven its ability to impact significantly on those heading for the high risk danger category.

Sidewalk salad bar

SOMETHING HIGHLY UNUSUAL is happening at the Melvin and Elsa Russell residence at 901 Lincoln Street in Wayne. Volunteer tomato plants do grow sometimes in gardens. But the Russells have a tomato plant growing out of cracks in their sidewalk, near one of the stalls in their two-car garage. They noticed the plant about three months ago. "Once I knew what it was," said Elsa, "I babied it all the way." Melvin came in to the Wayne Herald office and told of the unusual site. There are over 40 green tomatoes on the vine.

Funding schools discussed

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

Long range planning will be an important element toward gaining future increases in financial aid for elementary and secondary schools.

Dale Siefkes, representing the Nebraska School Boards Association, spoke on financial assistance to elementary and secondary schools and on other topics relating to changes affecting school administration that were recently mandated by the Nebraska legislature.

He was one of many speakers during an Education Service Unit One Workshop Day that drew over 650 teachers and administrators, hosted by staff at Wayne-Carroll High School and Middle School.

Siefkes, who addressed the administrators of surrounding school districts, was recently involved in a meeting with business and government officials concerning business and education and how the two topics are intertwined in the state's plans for economic development.

He said it was difficult to convince some officials at the meeting about the importance of increasing financial aid to the elementary schools.

THESE PEOPLE see Nebraska as "fourth in the nation on ACT test scores, second in the nation in terms of graduation ratio, although ranked 43rd in the area of teachers salaries."

"Nebraska ranked 11th in all these combined education factors," Siefkes said.

Their thinking was "what do we need more money for," he mentioned.

However, Siefkes said one response to that was if Nebraska doesn't start to increase its financial aid to elementary and secondary schools, then the state won't stay ranked in the top 11 very long. It will go down in ranking.

The state of Iowa, he said, recently put $92 million into teacher salary and education program improvement. "And Iowa finished first in ACT scores," he added.

If Nebraska were to be given more in financial aid, it would be important to list in detail where the money would be going and to prove that extra funding would make a difference. "Planning would be part of the requirement to get it [the additional funding]," he said.

In considering the planning, the additional financing does not have to be directed to new programs, but to enforce and expand current programs within the schools. "Current programs need support or we will hurt them. If that happens we will hurt the quality and excellence of education," he remarked.

"If we say [to the legislature] that we're going to need money to reduce property taxes, that's not going to fly."

ELEMENTARY and secondary schools didn't fare well in relationship to state financial aid in comparison to higher education.

There was a $2.5 million reduction in state funding for public education in the secondary and elementary schools. Higher education received approximately $11 million more.

Higher education in Nebraska has been successful in receiving more dollars, Siefkes said, because they have higher visibility and have a greater focus on role of mission in Nebraska.

Siefkes, during the ESU One Workshop, also spoke on areas of bargaining with teachers, special education issues, reorganization and non-resident tuition.

Seat belt law petitions filed

By Chuck Hackenmiller
Managing Editor

An organization called Nebraska Traffic Safety Now (NTSN) filed sample initiative petitions to restore Nebraska's seat belt law with Secretary of State Alan Beerman.

"We're ready to go whenever Mr. Beerman gives us his approval," said Rose White, chair of NTSN's Action Committee. "We've got circulators across the state who are anxious to get busy collecting signatures."

The NTSN Action Committee needs to collect 39,510 valid signatures by July 7, 1988, in order for the proposed law to be placed on the Nov. 8, 1988 general election ballot.

Nearly 267,000 Nebraskans voted to keep the law last fall, according to White, so she feels the support for the petition is out there.

DOUG RUBEN, NTSN director, feels that the law does make a big difference in saving lives and preventing serious injuries.

According to Ruben, the proposed law is identical to the one previously in effect, with one exception. "We've eliminated the requirement for people to buckle up in licensed farm vehicles. I know there was a lot of confusion about people thinking they needed to be buckled up on their combines, and we wanted to make that perfectly clear."

The proposed law requires front seat passengers to buckle up, provides for enforcement only as a secondary action when an individual has been stopped for another offense or suspected violation, and sets a penalty of $25.

News and Notes

by Mary Temme, Extension Agent-Home Ec.

Making your home quieter
Some people can tune out noisy household distractions. They can read the newspaper while the kids are watching Sesame Street and junior is practicing on the piano.

But what do you do when the noise level is so high it's driving you out of your home? Find a nice quiet place — the local library is always an option. Then draw the layout of your home. Consider where the sources of noises are.

While low level sounds may be merely annoying, exposure to high level noise may produce symptoms of stress. You may find yourself breathing faster and shallower, and your blood pressure rising.

Any noise above 90 decibels can cause permanent damage. Consider these noise-producing activities. A room with speech and background music is in the 60 decibel range. An electric typewriter is 50 to 70 decibels. Some window air conditioners produce 80 decibels. A whisper is about 20 decibels. A blender, garbage disposal, alarm clock and vacuuming are all in the 80 to 90 decibel range.

THE BASIC RULE of noise control is to stop it at its source. Some noise problems may require a combination of solutions. Sounds from a television, for example, can be reflected or transmitted by air to other rooms. Try keeping the set away from the wall and encouraging the use of earphones. Most televisions have a jack to insert earphones.

You can use a few interior design techniques to lower noise levels. The best sound absorbers are thick and porous. Fabric that is padded or gathered, as in upholstered furniture and draperies, can absorb noise. Try using padded wall hangings hung slightly away from the wall.

Carpets or rugs are good sound absorbers. If maintenance is a problem, such as in the kitchen, consider using washable rugs with non-skid backings. A well padded carpet can eliminate the clicking of heels and the clatter of children's toys.

Kitchens tend to be noisy because of the abundance of hard surfaces and the number of appliances. Use rubber bumpers or strips of foam on doors' inside edges to absorb impact when closing. Rubber mats in sinks and on counter tops help reduce impact noise from dishes and absorb vibrations of small appliances.

WSC spikers prepare for season

By Gregg Dahlheim
Sports Editor

The Wayne State Lady Wildcats will be trying to match last year's success when the team tied the record for most wins in a season with 29.

The Lady Cats posted a 29-22 mark in 1986 which tied the record that the 1984 squad set.

Coach Marilyn Strate is entering her fifth year as the volleyball coach at Wayne State. In her previous four years Strate has posted a career mark of 101-88-1. Her .532 winning percentage is the best in modern history at the NAIA school.

Strate will have three full-time and three part-time starters back from last year. In all, 10 letterwinners are back for the upcoming season. Seniors Diane Hanus and Shelle Tomaskiewicz-Lau and junior Meg Hurley return as full-time starters while setters Kim Baizer, Kolllette Frevert and Bev Moeller gained part-time experience last season.

Gone from last year are Missy Stoltenberg and Diana Asay. Stoltenberg was a member of the All-CSIC squad and was tabbed the second team All-NAC. Asay was named honorable mention All-NAC. The two won't be on the court in game situations but they will be assisting Strate from the sidelines. Jill Mathers also is an assistant to Strate.

Strate said although her team has some experience, as a whole they are a young squad. Three seniors are sprinkled throughout the roster.

Depth may be a problem for the Lady Wildcats. Strate said her starters are experienced but in the early part of the season experience off the bench will be sparse. The coach said there won't be a lot of substituting of the front-line players because of the lack of depth.

LADY WILDCAT spikers prepare for the season opener at Dana Sept. 9. The women will try to improve on their 29-22 mark from a year ago.

Strate said the team's strength lies in the setting ability of the three aforementioned. She said the passing and serving has also improved from last year.

Strate expects her squad to be in the middle of the pack in the CSIC. She said Kearney State and Missouri Southern will top the conference. The coach added, Missouri Western will also be strong even though they graduated several quality players. Last year the Lady Cats finished 8-7 in the CSIC. ## Newsprint hike expected Newspapers will be hit with a newsprint increase early next year, industry analysts are predicting.

 Mills are producing about as much newsprint as they can and demand is expected to grow; several analysts told the Associated Press.
 "I'd say there's an 80 percent probability that they will announce a price increase in November," Mark Kurland, research director and paper industry analyst at Mabon Nugent & Co., told AP. He predicted the increase would be about 5 percent.
 Newspaper publishers were hit with a 7 percent increase in the price of newsprint in July, when the cost of the paper went to $610 a metric ton.
 With mills operating at close to 100 percent capacity and with no new production facilities opening next year, analysts said demand is bound to outstrip supply.

"Things will be hot in next couple of years," Kurland said. "The market is incredibly tight," but prices could fall once mills increase their capacity, he said.
 Contributing to pressure that could drive up prices have been strikes at a number of Canadian mills. Canadian International Paper Inc., Consolidated-Bathurst Inc. and Donohue-Normick Inc. are among the paper producers to have settled strikes over the past two months.
 "The strikes have frightened some publishers," Kurland said. "Even though they'll be resolved, a strike tends to take production out, it drops inventories, and it tightens up supply and demand and makes a price increase easier to go through."
