Eggs and salmonella foodborne illness

Whether eaten raw or cooked, the contents of clean, uncracked eggs with unbroken healthy shells have always been considered safe from food poisoning bacteria. This is because the egg shell and the white contain several natural barriers of protection against bacterial invasion.

Recent media reports, especially about salmonella outbreaks in the northeastern United States, have cast doubt on this theory and caused a great deal of consumer concern about the safety of fresh Grade A eggs.

Dirty, cracked eggs and unrefrigerated egg-rich dishes, such as cream pies, puddings, custards and chicken and potato salads, often have been the source of salmonella food poisoning.

Heat kills bacteria. A lau degree F internal temperature for 3½ minutes is adequate. The bacteria do not grow at refrigerator temperatures. Commercial raw eggs from reputable producers have been washed and sanitized before packing and their flocks tested for salmonella. There is little chance of the eggs being contaminated unless they get cracked. With eggs direct from the farm, care must be taken to wash them properly, using water at least 20 degrees warmer than the inside of the egg, then refrigerate them. The temperature of hot top water is about right.

Don't leave raw eggs out of the shell or egg dishes at room or warm temperature more than an hour or two. Bacteria grow best at temperatures between 60 degrees and 120 degrees F.

Detween 60 degrees and 120 degrees F.

Use only clean, uncracked eggs for egg dishes that are not thoroughly cooked. These include eggs that are soft cooked, soft scrambled, fried and poached, and those used in cream pies, meringue, hollandaise sauce and salad dressing.

Promptly refrigerate cream pies, custards and puddings.

Dr. Stephen Becker, operator of Wayne Dental Clinic, offers in dividuals much more than flexible appointment scheduling and prompt treatment of emergency situations. His office, located in the Mineshaft — particularly in the field of cosmetic dentistry.

One area of cosmetic surgery in Becker's northeast Nebraska prac-tice deals with "Bonded Porcelain Veneers." The results can reap beautiful smiles.

Porcelain, either alone or fused to gold, has long been the premier material for creating beautiful smiles. But having to grind down teeth, offen perfectly healthy teeth, in order to use porcelain, has always been a major drawback to its use," according to Becker.

"Bonded Porcelain Veneers represents a major breakthrough in bonding technology. It is now possi-ble to bond thin veneers of porcelain to natural teeth," he mentioned. "This can be done in most cases ble to bond thin ve without shots, drilling or grinding down healthy teeth," he added.

BECKER HAS photographs at his office which reveal actual cases of Bonded Procetain Veneers. "Individuals can also talk to patients who have already had our bonded procelain veneers," he said.

Bonding, he said, is simple in concept but can be sophisticated in actual practice. "It's really more an art form than a technical procedure. It skillful-hand in its application," remarked.

Cosmetic dentistry, he said, is an alternative "for the better" building that dazzling, youthful and confident smile.

Other areas of new developments in dentistry also require continual monitoring. Becker, who received his undergraduate degree from Creighton University and received his doctorate degree from the Creighton Dental School, is very familiar with the variety of crowns, porcelain and plastic facings and different colored fillings.

He keeps up with peridontics (gum work) and endodontics (working with the pulpal chambers of the teeth). He works with dentures, cosmetic fillings and childrens dentistry and other areas as well.

Most importantly, Becker believes that a smile is the most expressive and powerful facial communicator.

"It communicates your values in life more përsuasively than clothes, jewelry or makeup. And unlike the above, it never goes out of style and it's with you all the time no matter where you are or what you're doing," he mentioned.

"Experience would help the scout-master understand the scouting proalso have to be somebody that enjoys kids and working with young boys They should enjoy camping," said Pedersen.

"The person should expect to be going on summer trips, up to two weeks, during the summer months,"

Highlights of his career have to be the number of young men who have achieved Eagle Scout awards and the camping trips — whether it be just a weekend outing or a 12-day survival trip in New Mexico. "But the thing that has really helped me and other scoutmasters is the very good support from the parents of the boys in the troop," he Pedersen sees an increase in the number of Boy Scouts, based on the growing number of Cub Scouts.

HE SAID HE is also gratéful for those people who have donated each month to the newspaper drive. Old newspapers are collected by the Boy Scouts in Wayne and sold for recycling. The money from the old newspaper sales finances camping trips and other activities of the Boy Scout troop, Pedersen said.

"We really appreclate all the pape that the people give to us," he said. "It helps our troop a great deal."

Meet your WAYNE HERALD Marketer, carrier

Aaron Walton

Eighth grader Aaron Walton, son of Darrel and Betty Walton, delivers 89 Wayne Heralds and Marketers in the southwest section of Wayne.

Aaron, age 13, resides at 210 South Douglas in Wayne. His favorite classes are Shop and Physical Education. Football is his favorite extra-curricular school activity. Some of his non-school activities he likes are fishing, swimming and bicycling.

Aaron started as a carrier with the Wayne Herald and Marketer in February, 1987.

"I like my carrier job because It teaches me responsibility and it is extra money," he said.

Someday he would like to buy a car with the money he earns. His ambition in life is to be successful and wealthy. What advice would he give to those who would like to become a carrier? "It's hard work but it's rewarding," he answered.
