By Mark Crist Managing Editor

Former Congressman Hal Daub made a late-but-brief appearance at Daylight Donuts in Wayne Wednesday around 4:45 p.m. to meet with some of his constituents to voice some of his platform ideas as well as listen to concerns exmakes his bid for the senatorial race against Sen. Jim Exon.

Daub, who arrived about 45 minutes late, said he has thrown away the play book in this cam-paign to march into the senate on a grass-roots ticket. The Republican candidate said he will be visiting several communities in Nebraska to see what kind of representation the public wants.

"We've visited several counties to establish a Nebraska ägenda, which will incorporate Nebraska values and main street priorities," he said. "We have good ideas and that's what it's all about. I want to contribute my ideas to change the nation for the better." Daub said when he's elected, he wants to hold regular town hall meetings to hear the concerns of the state he serves. He said he doesn't like the fact that Exon hasn't taken time away from Washington, D.C. to visit Nebraska to find what the concerns of his constituents are. He said he doesn't like the fact that Ne-Braska's citizens are not being properly represented in the sen-

"WE'RE ENCOURAGED in our campaign that we can beat Exon because he's been in office so long," Daub said. "If people know their senator and know I have a personal relationship with them, it will be good. I want people to know on a regular basis that I'm available for their concerns."

Some of the issues Daub ad-dressed dealt with mandatory health care by businesses and problems with the social security system. He said he is opposed to mandatory health care because it drives up the prices businesses charge their customers and results in fewer employees on the payroll in fewer employees on the payroll. He said there are different ap-proaches to what he called the "Kennedy approach."

His real intention in his Wayne visit was to listen to voters con-cerns. One concern expressed dealt with the changes in crop in-surance and the farm bill. He said the current farm bill is as good as any done by the federal govern-ment in the past but revisions need ment in the past but revisions need to be made in the disaster insurance clauses. Daub noted, how-ever, in his opening remarks that the farm economy will improve during the '90s, while the economy for Wayne overall will improve. "The ag economy over the next

"The ag economy over the next 10 years will be more good than bad," he said. "When you look at consumption patterns and shifting in the market, the indicators look good. For Wayne, things look strong because it has a good mix in its economy and Wayne State College pits Wayne in one of the most positive positions as any-where in the state."

DAUB NOTED, TOO, that he thinks the major issues the federal government will face in the next 10 years will deal with changes in interest rates, inflation rates and the federal deficit.

"If we can keep inflation around four percent and start worrying a little more about our backyard problems, the nation will be in good shape heading into the 21st century."

In his closing remarks to a group of about five individuals, Daub said of about five individuals, Daub said he wants to fight to improve the small business situation and find fi-nancing incentives for small busi-nesses to open and stay healthy. He said, in addition, that he wants to have a cooperative effort with the city of Wayne to build on its strengths.

"If I can help Wayne, let me know," Daub said.

THE BOOKS IN THE CAAP THE BOOKS IN THE CAAP program are provided in part by the U.S. Congress with partial funding by Burger King, Inc. The program was first piloted in 1988 with some 4,000 students in 150 classrooms in 17 states participating. The program was so well re ceived and the feedback so overwhelming positive, that the pro-gram expanded.

After revisions were made to the materials, CAAP was field tested in January 1989 with ap-proximately 24,000 students in 500 schools. Participants outlined the importance of civic education, the importance of civic education, the importance of citizenship and the value of history and the program was heavily praised because of its opportunities to experience firsthand the responsibilities of being a good citizen. Pickinpaugh said the class has hopes to take part in a civic project sometime this year, but right now time constraints may cause some problems. She said she has other plans with the unit such as bringing in people with strong credit knowl-edge and asking them to speak to the students about the troubles of credit as well as the importance of savings.

United States would be bankrupt during the next decade or so. "We're learning a lot about how the economy is run and what our culture means to us," said Amy. Dickinson, a sixth grader in Pickin-paugh's 8:50 a.m. class. "Right now the U.S. has some real problems, like drugs. We're not going to have a future if drug and alcohol abuse aren't taken under control. We also need to worry about the economy because we're so far in debt." Classmate Nate Wattier agreed. "I like what we're doing a lot because it helps you become a better citizen. We still need to get through the drug and alcohol problem because it has become so widespread, it's going to be hard to get stopped. I think sooner or later, though, we're going to be able to get these problems under control."

The program will continue for the next few weeks, according to Pickinpaugh. She said while she's been proud of the students in-volvement in the project, she's also been pleased in their concerns of

The Wayne Herald, Monday, March 12, 1996

Perspective By Gary and Peggy Wright

A special feature in The Wayne Herald makes its debut elsewhere on this page. Simply titled "Honored Graduate," this new item promotes past students of Wayne Carroll High School. The idea was conceived by a group of school patrons interested in publicizing achievements of former students who now are successful in the "real world" and who attribute (at least some of) their current success to the very positive educational training or experiences they received while attending WHS in their "formative" years. The entire school community rightfully deserves to be proud of its edu-cational system. The endless list of successful graduates serves as living testimony that the system not only works but is flourishing. Indeed, the system is producing some of the highest level professionals in many facets of the American economy. Success means different things to different people and over the course-of this Honored Graduate feature readers will see the full gamut of ways former WHS students have achieved "success" in adulthood. Numerous local businesses have given their financial support to this project. Also, a selection committee has been established to choose who will be featured in the newspaper from the list of nominations received, The new financial support to this project.

project. Also, a selection committee has been established to choose who will be featured in the newspaper from the list of nominations received, To keep this selection process as pure as possible members of the selec-tion committee will remain anonymous. In future newspaper columns we will explain more about this Honored Graduate program. Topics to be addressed include: 1) criteria and the process of nominating a former WHS student and; 2) what happens after a person is selected.

a person is selected. As each issue of the newspaper features a different individual from yet another field of endeavor it will become more and more apparent to readers what a wide range of positive educational experience is available at WHS.

The next time you drive by the high school, look up at the outdoor sign. While one side of the sign lists a schedule of events, the other side usually displays a saying which offers some sort of advice useful in every-day life. As you consider this Thought of the Day and the numerous suc-cess of Wayne Carroll High School students, it is evident the local educa-tional system practices what it preaches.

Water contamination

The Wayne Herald, Monday, March 12, 199

University of Nebraska Cooperative

Public water supplies are tested on a regular basis and must meet federal and state safe drinking wa-ter criteria. On the other hand, says Hay, there are no require-ments for private water supply testing. Consequently, individuals with private wells are responsible for testing their own water supplies for testing their own water supplies and selecting treatment equip-ment when needed.

In response to the growing con-cern over drinking water quality, manufacturers now offer a large array of products that promise to make the water safe, or "pure." The consumer often is not sure if the equipment is necessary or if the equipment will actually remove the undesirable chemicals, said chemical laboratory is the preferred source to obtain an anwer to this question.

Another important considera-tion is to validate that the products have been tested by an indepen-dent testing agency like the Na-tional Sanitation Foundation or the Water Quality Association. If the equipment has been tested by one of these groups, Hay thinks that the consumer can feel safe in purchasing the equipment if water treatment is necessary.

Hay will discuss various water treatment methods at the Guarding Water Quality Seminar spon-sored by the Wayne Agribusiness Council at Wayne State College on March 15 at 1:30 p.m. Hay's presentation will be one of eight sub-jects related to water quality dis-cussed by water experts.

Agronomist offers suggestions on time to plant crops

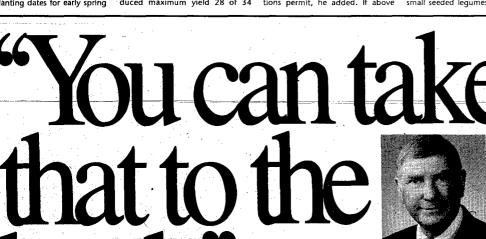

AREA - Producers would rather have wet fields in early March than dry ones, according to University of Nebraska Agronomist Russell Moomaw, of the Northeast Re-search and Extension Center in Concord. Since fields are dry, however, and air temperatures are presently above normal, farmers are beginning to wonder when the best planting dates for early spring seeding exists. Oats, barley and spring wheat are the earliest planted spring crops in northeast Nebraska, accrops in northeast Nebraska, ac-cording to Moomaw. He added that the long term oat date of planting studies at Lincoln showed that oats respond, favorably to early planting. Oats planted be-tween March 20 and April 1 pro-duced maximum yield 28 of 34 years, according to research find-ings. Grain test weight averaged two to three pounds per bushel higher when oats were planted by April 1. These results apply throughout southeastern Nebraska, Moomaw said. For northeast Nebraska, March 25 to April 5 is the best time to plant small grains when soil condi-tions permit, he added. If above being used as a nurse crop for al-falfa, planting should be delayed 10 to 14 days to minimize freeze damage to the legume, Moomaw said. Also, preparation of a firm seedbed is especially important for small seeded legumes.
