"We tend to lose the best of the new teachers," says Rodney Garwood, administrator of Educational Service Unit One in Wakefield. "We believe this program will retain teachers who we desperately need in education.

The first years of teaching can be very traumatic, according to Larry Harris, a Wayne State College administrator who is in charge of the partnership program. He-says many new teachers experience many new teachers experience "less-than-successful beginnings and leave the profession."

The Master reacher rathership does not give "master" status to new teachers. Instead, veteran teachers in the Northeast Nebraska service units will be named "Master Teachers."

The veterans, in turn, will be trained to work with new teachers who need assistance during their first years of teaching.

Low pay, little recognition and too few support mechanisms are among the reasons why young teachers leave classrooms, says Donald Thompson of ESU Eight in Neligh. He says programs like the Master Teacher Partnership are desperately needed in order to bring prestige back to the teaching

This spring, experienced teach-ers may apply for the Master Teacher program. Eventually, 170 area educators will participate.

Wayne State College will pro-

"The program serves two purposes," Garwood says. "It is a mechanism to help teachers in a non-threatening manner, and it provides recognition for outstanding teachers who are already out there."

The administrators believe the program, which will cost the service units about $10,000 collectively each year, will improve the quality of teaching and enhance morale in northeast Nebraska schools.

Company announces plans for new plant

AREA - At a press conference in the Bloomfield City Auditorium Wednesday, March 28, the Milton G. Waldbaum Company an-nounced plans for a new egg production facility there.

According to David Gardner, chief operating officer at the Milton C. Waldbaum plant in Wakefield, construction for the new faclity will begin within the next 30-60 days, with completion scheduled in two years.

Gardner said the new facility is just an extension of the company and will have no impact on the Wakefield facility.

"The plant in Wakefield is the main headquarters where we do primary sales and processing," Gardner said. "The plant in Bloomfield will be an expansion of the company for production purposes." Gardner also said the new site does not mean Waldbaums is not looking to expand in the immediate.

looking to expand in the immediate Wakefield area. He said Waldbaums is still conducting its search for a site for an added growing plant in the Wakefield area.

THE SELECTION PROCESS for a new plant began about a year ago, Gardner said. The planned facility in Bloomfield was one of 21 sites in the area which had a letter sent to it through Nebraska Public Power District. He said of the 21

Power District. He said of the 21 sites which were notified, 18 responded and of that 18, four were in the final running. While not wishing to say which area cities were sent letters, he did say it was in a 60-70 mile radius of the Wakefield plant.

"Bloomfield was chosen because there's a good match between Bloomfield and Waldbaums," he said. "We think they have the labor force we need for us to develop a plant there. They have an excellent city council and city administrator as well as an agcity administrator as well as an aggressive community development board. They wanted Waldbaums to come there."

Gardner said expansion didn't occur in Wakefield because the labor force wasn't available there. He said that was one of the reasons Wayne was not really in the running for the site.

Farmers and ranchers alike are raising their voices in response to animal rights activists who are claiming agricultural livestock are being inhumanely treated.

An initial response written by George Beattie, the director of the Nebraska Department of Agriculture, slashes out at activist groups following a request by the Nebraska state coordinator of the Great American Meat Out that people forgo meat on March 20.

Donald Liedman, president of the Wayne County Farm Bureau, said Beattie had just cause to write the letter, which was sent statewide to newspapers in response to the Great American Meat Out's tactics. Liedman said sponse to the Great American Meat Out's tactics. Liedman said animal rights activists are not only in the minority, but usually come from cities and have little exposure to agriculture. A copy of the letter is published in today's Wayne Herald.

"I really don't know sometimes what's running through their (activists) minds," Liedman said. "If you care for your livestock, they'll care for you. In the agricultural industry, you can't abuse your live-stock or you'll go under."

LIEDMAN SAID farmers need to make an extra effort to educate people about the agricultural production process, especially those from non-agricultural backgrounds. He said if this education doesn't take place, minority activist groups could create laws which will be constrictive to production.

"We in agriculture are gearing we in agriculture are gearing up to show we take care of our crops and our soil," he said. "We have to educate people in urban areas about this because 20 percent of the nation's gross national product is in agriculture. If we do what these (activists) people want, then there will be famine and our economy will go to pot." economy will go to pot."

In addition to putting food on the table, Liedman said animals are used for research purposes. He said without animals, American medicine would fall way behind and medical advances would come to a crawl.

To compound agriculture's problem, Liedman said about a year ago there was a group of people in Wayne who didn't think the agriculture industry was important.

"There were some people who didn't think the dairy farmer was necessary because they got their milk from the store," he said. "If people are thinking that way, we need to do more to educate people."

a labor of love for Reikofskis 'Everybody's home' near Wakefield

By Mark Crist Managing Editor

When Evelyn and Ken Reikofski When Evelyn and Ken Reikofski purchased their home 4 1/2 miles south of Wakefield three years ago, you might have thought they were crazy, even at the $6,000 price tag they paid for it.

Today, people might take a different view.

The Reikofski's purchased the Aistrope mansion which had been

The Reikotski's purchased the Aistrope mansion, which had been deserted for years, and turned the dilapidated, leaking and ready to crumble structure into the place mey call "everybody's home."
"It was really my idea," Mrs.
Reikofski säid. "We were tied up needed to start over again, so we came up here." In addition to turning the three-story building, which had apparently inhabited drug users and transients for some time, into and transients for some time, into their home, they have worked hard to preserve the house for future generations.

"I figure that letting buildings go like this is the modern way of life, but we had to do something to preserve this," she said.

WHEN THE REIKOFSKI'S ini-tially looked at the home, Mr. Reikofski said he didn't want to buy it. He said he got as far as the kitchen and that was enough for him. But Mrs. Reikofski's persistence to fix up the home, which had once inhabited one of the best-known families in the area, because of the tradition the home carried.

After they had purchased the property, the Reikofski's had to live in a structure behind the main house which had once been used as a guest house and later as a chicken coop. Mrs. Reikofski said they couldn't live in the main house because all three floors were rotting from water damage because the roof leaked. "When we started, we took 15 loads of garbage out," she said. "After we had cleaned it out, we started work on the roof and the porch. We had to work on the porch because if it had fallen off

DURING THE CLEANING process; they found several marijuana pipes as well as stashed cocaine, heroin and marijuana. They also found several used hypodermic needles and dead animals inside the house. Then, after about two months, they faced one of their biggest threats — a group of six men who wanted to throw the Reikofski's out of their property so they could use it for storing and using their drugs.

"I knew if they got ahold of us we were done for," Mrs. Reikofski said.

So in an effort to scare them off, she reached in the back of their pickup and picked up a pipe about the size of a shotgun barrel and said if they didn't leave, she'd "I was scared but I couldn't let

"I was scared but I couldn't let them know I was scared," she said. "I figured it was the only chance we had since there were six of them and only two of us. I had to bluff because it was the only chance we hand." BUT THROUGH perseverance and a lot of hard work, the Reikof-ski's were able to get the house in shape to live in. About 1 1/2 years after they purchased the property, they were able to move in. She said the roof was fixed and the windows repaired to the point the house was inhabitable house was inhabitable.

"When we found out windows cost $300 for a sheet the size of our picture window, we knew we couldn't swing it," Mrs. Reikofski said. "After finding that out, we put out requests to people in the area and people from all over would bring us their old glass after they had put up new storm. they had they had put up new storm windows. It was really quite a sight to see."

That's one of the reasons they home", Mrs. call it "everybody's home", Mrs. Reikofski said — because everyone pitched in to help us out.

In addition, when area people would drive by and would notice someone was living in the mansion, they would stop to see the progress the Reikofski's were making.

"There's a lot of wonderful peo-ple around here," Mrs. Reikofski said. "People would often stop by to see if they could help and they'd keep coming back to watch our progress."

IN ADDITION to restoring the home, the Reikofski's have various collections from dolls, to 100-plus year-old books and other

WOULD THEY HAVE taken on the project again today? Probably not, they concede but if they had the opportunities to experience the joys accompanied with the re-building of the structure, they'd probably do it again.

"I doubt we would've tackled a project this large again," she said. "It was in worse shape than I thought it would be: It was lots and lots of work. I know that I know the lots of work. did for the community and I knew this house had to be saved."

It all dates back to the hard times they faced when they lived in Lincoln.

FOUNDATION

TO ORGANIZE
Ron Leapley, high school principal, was unanimously elected as overall chairman of a newly formed scholarship foundation for Winside

Approximately 35 Winside area residents, including several students, met Tuesday evening at the Winside Stop Inn to discuss the possibility of setting up a scholarship foundation for graduating students.

Ron Leapley chaired the meeting and presented information on other area communities who have established such foundations and are now providing funds to help graduates attend college. By a se-cret ballot vote, of those present, 31 voted in favor of Winside estab-lishing such a foundation. Committees then were estab-lished and chairmen selected from each to serve on an executive committee. These include invest-ment committee, Don Leighton; fund solicitation committee, Ken Kollath; donor recognition commit-tee, Randall Bargstadt; scholarship selection committee, Lorraine Prince; publicity, Dianne Jaeger; and foundation chairman, Mr.

and foundation chairman, Mr. Leapley.

The members present decided because of the lack of time to properly set up the foundation and its guidelines, no funds would be awarded to this year's graduates.

The committees will meet again Tuesday_April 17 to proceed with plans. Anyone who is interested in helping with the organization of this foundation is invited to attend.

For sixth, seventh and eighth graders, the climax of the awareness campaign will be viewing the play, "Halfway There." This play is being performed by Periwinkle Productions, a theatre company in New York that has an excellent reputation for developing relevant plays for young audiences.

The play was inspired by a book of poetry by young former drug addicts and deals with the problems and pressures that lead peo-ple into drug use. The title of the play comes from the dedication page of the book: "To all of us who are halfway between what we are and what we can become."

The play will be performed at The play will be performed at Rice Auditorium on April 10 at 2 p.m. Parents are invited to attend. There is no admission charge for the play. The interdepartmental drug awareness campaign is being coordinated by Joan Sudmann, Middle and Elementary School Clinical Service Director.

Sudmann, a clinical social worker, is enthusiastic about the project. "Just Say No' is not enough," she says. "A recent Rand Corporation study of drug prevention efforts in schools determined that successful programs emphasize helping students learn practical techniques for resisting the pressures to use drugs. The kids need knowledge, but they also need self-awareness and coping skills for handling feelings and relationships with their peers. ## Cahoy chosen to take part in nationwide program

WAYNE - Wayne State College student Sheryl Cahoy of Norfolk is one of only 30 students from across the nation chosen to participate in the William Howe Direct Marketing Collegiate Institute in Denver, Colo., on April 2 through April 7. Cahoy, a business marketing and finance major, competed for the scholarship against student applicants from major universities and other colleges across the country.

Besides providing a basic overview of the direct marketing fold students will be given the opportunity to work on resumes and learn how to promote them-selves in a competitive job market. "The institute offers Mrs. Cahoy and our Wayne State marketing program great exposure to professional marketers, says Dr. Kenneth G. Hallgren, associate professor of business at Wayne State College.

"She will also bring back a host of insights in the direct marketing field that she will share with her peers in direct marketing courses. This type of experience is extremely beneficial to developing her professionally and provides ex cellent cultural and social exposure beyond Northeast Nebraska. Mrs. Cahoy, a 1987 graduate of Naper Public High School, plans to pursue a career in marketing or a related field following graduation in in the upper level of the student center.

Voting will take place from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. each day.

The event, sponsored by the Wayne State College Chapter of Blue Key, National Honor Fraternity, allows students to vote for the professor they feel has made a significant impact on their life, both in the classroom and outside it as well. The instructor chosen as outstanding professor for 1989-90 will receive an award at spring commencement in recognition of their selection.

Cecilia Falk

Falk speaks at area -cattlemen's meeting

WAYNE - Cecilia Falk, Adminis-trative Assistant of the Nebraska Cattlemen office in Lincoln spoke with the Northeast Cattlemen As-with the Northeast Cattlemen Association in Wayne on March 26.

Several topics were discussed and Falk explained the importance of being an organized unit when it came to legislative and animal rights issues. She pointed out that the cattle industry is the largest industry in the state, with 32,000 ranches and farms involved with cattle. Of 93 counties, cattle outnumber people in 89 of them. The past two years, Nebraska has led the nation in fed cattle marketed. In January, 1990, Nebraska became the number one cattle feeding state and is number three feeding state and is number three in cattle inventory. When the IBP plant opens in Lexington will be number one in cattle slaughter. With a membership approaching 5,000 she explained the need to approach key legislative offices to present a united front for the betterment of the cattle industry.

Falk also explained other programs in the Nebraska Cattlemen Association. Two very important ones being the market reporting service and the beef safety assur-ance program. There are many other ongoing programs with edu-cation of both cattle raisers and consumers being one of the major goals of the association.

In addition to the presentation by Falk, new directors and officers were elected. Directors are Dakota County, Dave Beerman; Dixon County, Dwain Ekberg and Larry Koster; Thurston County, Gale Lander and LaVern Kubik; Wayne County, Jon Rethwisch and Bill McQuistan. Gale Lander was elected president and Dave Beer man, secretary/treasurer.

Plans set for show at WSC on April 3

WAYNE - Wayne State College's Center for Cultural Outreach riges Center for Cultural Outreach will present "Tales of the Jazz Age". Tuesday, April 3, at 8 p.m., in the Brandenburg Education Building's Ley Theatre on the College campus. Admission is free and open to the public.

This program includes music for piano by George Gershwin, Claude Debussy, Scott Joplin, and Samuel Barber; vocal music by Paul Bowles, Ned Rorem, Francis Poulenc, and Cole Porter; and readings by James Agee and T.S. Eliot. The featured work of the program will be highlights from Gershwin's folk opera "Porgy and Bess."

"Although a few pieces might be described as early jazz or popular music, most of the works are by composers from the first half of the 20th century whose music has a jazz influence," says Dr. Beverly Soll, pianist and director of the Center. "The program provides a

Director speaks out

LINCOLN - As Director of the Nebraska Department of Agriculture, I feel compelled to speak out on behalf of Nebraska's farmers, feeders and ranchers, concerning a request by a local organization which can be described as ludicrous, at best.

This past week, the Nebraska state coordinate of the Great American Meat Out suggested that Nebraskans forego meat on March 20. The event was described as "a light-hearted and fun way to help people understand their dietary habits." The spokesperson etary habits." Ine spokesperson went on to criticize agriculture and charges that the "suffering of factory farm animals" . . . "global starvation" . . "reckless destruction of agricultural and natural resources" . . and "health resources" . . . and "health problems" are all somehow related to America's livestock industry.

Such statements lead me to Such statements lead me to question the spokesperson's understranding of agriculture and the importance of the livestock industry to Nebraska's economy. In addition, the spokesperson has clearly overlooked the respect Nebraska's producers have always had for the environment and the animals raised on their farms.

This past week we celebrated National Ag Day. Thousands of Nebraskans joined together to celebrate agriculture and salute the many contributions our farmers, feeders and ranchers con-ers, feeders and ranchers contribute to Nebraska and this country. This is the type of celebration we should be supporting and-not a boycott of the fine products produced by the livestock industry.
