Area officials address child abuse problems

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

Child abuse: It almost seems like the two words shouldn't go together, but sometimes you hear about it and like most people, it probably leaves a gut-wrenching feeling in your stomach.

During 1989 alone, the Nebraska Department of Social Services conducted 7,500 investigations on child abuse and neglect.

In northeast Nebraska — in the counties which are represented by the Pierce County office — there was 1,204 cases reported in 1989, 686 of the 1,204 were substantiated, involving 1,189 children. Sexual abuse reports covered 103 of these cases, according to statistics provided by the Pierce office, which represents Wayne, Cedar, Knox, Pierce and Antelope counties as well as the Santee Indian Reservation.

In an effort to bring awareness to child abuse, Gov. Kay Orr has joined states across the nation in proclaiming April as child abuse awareness month.

LOCALLY, OFFICIALS are doing what they can to help curb child abuse. Just this year, the Wayne Public Schools hired a full-time counselor, with a strong background in social service for the middle and elementary schools.

Law enforcement officials in Wayne County have steadily become more involved in handling instances of child abuse, as well.

Parasite could pose a threat to dogs

WAYNE - If you aren't familiar with heartworm in dogs, now may be the time to take notice, according to local veterinarian Dr. Dave Swerczek.

Heartworm is just that — worms which attack the heart of canines — but it can be found as an unwelcome guest in cats as well as humans.

According to a press release from the American Association of Veterinary Parasitologists, heartworm in dogs can be fatal and in humans, the worm can attack such places as the eye or the brain.

Pet owners may be in luck, however, since spring is the time veterinarians commonly check dogs for heartworm.

According to Joan Sudmann, counselor for the Wayne elementary and middle schools, there is a need for a counselor to help direct the area's youth in the right direction. Sudmann said in the past teachers have handled some of the problems associated with abuse but the services she provides help take some of the weight off the educators' shoulders.

"It's a regular part of what I deal with as a counselor," Sudmann said. "It's not unusual to have children confide in me, but child abuse is only part of the problem. Sometimes kids will want to talk about abuse in their homes between parents or between a mother and her boyfriend."

Sudmann said children often dismiss abuse as discipline. She said children try to minimize abuse by "believing they're no good."

She added, however, that her position was not created because of child abuse. She said that's just a small part of the reason she was hired.

"I think there is a trend among educators to take more of an interest for the child to help them learn to solve problems," she said. "Teaching the child problem solving is just as important to surviving as are the abilities to read and write."

THERE ALSO SEEMS to be a general trend throughout the public sector as well to report instances of child abuse/neglect, according to Laurie Millard, the

"The incidence of heartworm in dogs in Wayne is low, but that doesn't mean it can't show up," Swerczek said. "Since dogs commonly travel with families, one infected dog could infect others in town."

Swerczek said heartworm is spread from dog to dog by mosquito. He said if a mosquito bites an infected dog and lets the parasite mill within its body for a while, and then bites an uninfected dog, the dog will suffer from the disorder.

ALTHOUGH THE INCIDENCE of heartworm in humans is rare, it has been known to happen. Swerczek said since the heartworm is an director of child protective services for Wayne County.

"People think child abuse is on the rise but it's actually a case where more occurrences are being reported," Millard said. "People have the misconception that social services can come in and whisk away children but there's a court procedure we have to follow to prove there's imminent danger to the child."

In addition to child abuse, the department of social services also works with uncontrollable juveniles, Millard said. Such youth include runaways, truant students and those youth with behavioral problems in the home. Millard said in most cases, the department of social services learns about these youth through county attorneys and occasionally from parents.

Another way social services learns of child abuse/neglect is through law enforcement agencies. According to Wayne County Sheriff LeRoy Janssen, children are only removed from the home if there is a present and imminent danger to them.

He said if abuse/neglect is reported, law enforcement officials will contact social services and together they will check into the safety of the child who has been reported through anonymous tips.

"The main thing to remember is we're not here to break up families," Janssen said. "We're here to make it better. We do a joint investigation with social services to see if harm is being done to the child."

He said if an officer arrives at the scene following a report of domestic problems and a child is found battered from what appears to be abusive conditions, the officer will remove the youth from the home until after an investigation is completed by social services.

THE PROBLEM WITH having to work with child abuse situations is that it can take an emotional toll on social service workers as well as law enforcement officials, Janssen and Millard agreed.

"The biggest thing I see is a real fear of social service people," Millard emotionally said. "It's not our purpose to take children. I've gone up to doors and a mother will begin to cry because she thinks we'll take her kids away but we're there to protect her and her kids from abuse."

Janssen said despite training to deal with child abuse situations, it is difficult to take the child out of the home.

You can say you don't get emotionally involved but you do to the extent to make sure the child is protected," he said. "You want to stay impartial in that type of situation but you have to consider the child's best interest."

MILLARD ADDED that the biggest problem facing social services involves the need for appropriate foster care. She said the greatest resource shortage within communities is not providing enough foster care.

"We like to try to keep the child in their own community so they can continue to keep contact with peers and family; that's the concept of foster care," she said. "We just have a shortage of people who are willing to offer it."

In addition, problems seem to be surfacing more and more because families need to have both parents working in order to make ends meet.

According to Sudmann, if youth don't get the appropriate attention at home, they look for it elsewhere, either to peers, teachers or ministers and there can be some consequences when the child looks elsewhere for attention.

Janssen said although he understands the importance of two-income households, families need to spend what he calls "more prime time" together.

"We have some kids come in here to talk to people who are staying here," Janssen said of the Wayne County Juvenile Correctional Facility. "And they'll tell their brother or sister that since they've come in here, it's the most they've talked to their Mom or Dad in a long time. That says to me that we need to spend more one-on-one time with our kids. It's a growing problem we need to recognize. Our children have needs and we have to address that."

Allen centennial year to kick off with Dollar Day

The community of Allen will kick off its year-long centennial celebration with Dollar Day on Wednesday, April 11 — the date 100 years ago that Henry Allen deeded 40 acres of land for the townsite for $1.

All area residents are invited to attend a special program Wednesday at 2:30 p.m. in the school gymnasium. The program will include a play presented by the school's drama department depicting the town's early history.

Allen family members also will be recognized during the afternoon. In addition, there will be a demonstration by local square dancers, along with musical selections, birthday cake, punch and coffee.

Those attending also will receive a centennial token dollar with the Allen centennial logo and dates of the centennial celebration, July 4-7, 1991. Centennial token dollars also will be placed on some cupcakes to be redeemed at local businesses for $1.

ALSO AVAILABLE during Wednesday's Dollar Day celebration will be certificates of deed which may be purchased for an inch of Heritage Park — the community's mini park which was renamed in recognition of the town's upcoming centennial.

A spokesman for the centennial committee said the deeds will sell for $1 and will enable residents of the community to purchase a part of their heritage, as well as make nice gifts for former residents who have moved from their heritage.

Money received from the sale of certificates will go to the Allen centennial fund. Allen centennial T-shirts also will be available to purchase during the day.

IN ADDITION to Wednesday's Dollar Day observance, residents of Allen are in the process of scheduling various other events — at least one each month — leading up to the grand centennial celebration in July 1991.

Citizens of the community are encouraged to plant flowers in the centennial colors of red and white. The Dixon County Historical Society has centennial pins for sale, and sunbonnets are available from Carol Jean Stapleton.

It also was announced that the Allen history book, a project of the Allen High School annual staff, is nearing completion and will soon be delivered to the printer.

Specialist offers tips for making Easter eggs

AREA - With Easter just around the corner, the Nebraska Department of Agricultural Communications is making efforts to educate the public about some of the hazards associated with decorating Easter eggs.

According to Darlene Martin, Ph.D., whose office is in the Northeast Nebraska Experiment Station near Concord, people must take proper precautions when preparing Easter eggs.

One of the most important things is to make sure eggs are not left out of the refrigerator for more than two hours or salmonella may develop, she said.

"I'd recommend using candy or plastic eggs for Easter egg hunts because they're better to use than real eggs," she said. "That's not to say you shouldn't boil and decorate Easter eggs with your children because it creates a warmth and emotional involvement with children."

Martin said it's also important to eat the boiled eggs shortly after they've been cooked. She said hard boiled eggs initially destroy the salmonella bacteria in them but if they're left to sit in the refrigerator a while, they will spoil.

"AN EGG KEEPS its good quality for a couple of weeks, if its kept in the refrigerator," she said. "It will start deteriorating two or three days after being cooked but refrigeration helps to slow micro-organism growth, but it doesn't stop it."

One of the things Martin said is common with eggs after they've been hard boiled, is the egg will form a green color around the yolk. She said that green ring is not harmful. "All it indicates is over cooking," she said.

She also offered a piece of advice for people who plan to cook Easter eggs.

"When people prepare eggs for Easter, maybe they should boil and decorate them on the Friday before Easter and have them for breakfast Easter day," she said. "That would help keeping the eggs from rotting in your refrigerator."

SOME TIPS ARE also offered from the USDA for food safety, which may be helpful in preparing Easter eggs.

• Leave eggs in their original carton in the refrigerator. Eggs

SWERCZEK SAID although Wayne has been a low-risk area for the disease in the past, it doesn't mean it will stay that way. He said the parasite started in the south and when people started moving around the country with greater ease, it increased the percentage of outbreaks nationwide, especially in areas where there's a lot of mosquitos.

"If you take your dogs to water areas, you're more likely to come in contact with mosquitos and the dogs may become infected," he said. "Anyone who takes their pets with them to places like Lewis and Clark Reservoir will run a greater risk of returning with an infected dog, but preventative medicine can prevent the outbreak."

Swerczek said two forms of medication are available for the prevention of heartworm. He said there is medicine which can be administered daily from April through October or another form which is administered once a month during the high-risk months.

"By controlling vaccinations, having regular checkups and checking for parasites, your pet's life expectancy can increase by five or more years," he said.

stored in the compartment in the refrigerator increase the chance of cracking and becoming infected with bacteria.

• Do not use an egg if the shell cracks in the cooking process. A cracked egg most likely will become infected in a shorter period of time than an uncracked one.

• Hard boiled eggs should be eaten within one week after cooking. Separated hard-boiled yolks should be used within five days.

IN THE EVENT salmonella poisoning occurs, Martin recommends that people consult with a physician. She said the signs of salmonella poisoning don't appear until 24 to 48 hours after ingestion of the infecting agent.

Some of the signs of salmonella poisoning include stomach ache, vomiting, fever and diarrhea. Martin said salmonella poisoning is rarely fatal but extremely unpleasant.

"The best thing to do is just prevent it," she said.

Henry Schmitz

Study named after former WSC custodian

WAYNE - The Henry Schmitz Study has been established in Wayne State College's Rice Auditorium in memory of the custodian who died in 1982.

Formerly the Wildcat Room, the Study was made possible through donations from former Wayne State athletes and the Wayne State Foundation, according to Dr. Ralph Barclay, division head of human performance and leisure studies at Wayne State. New furniture and photographs were added to the room.

Schmitz, who served Wayne State from 1959 to 1975, was also inducted into the Wayne State Athletic Hall of Fame for contributions to the athletic program. A Henry Schmitz Memorial Scholarship has also been established at Wayne State.

"Henry was loved by all the athletes while he was here," says Barclay. "He was a 'father away from home' to them."

Census, postal service teaming up on 1990 census delivery problems

AREA - Responding to reports of concentrations of undeliverable census questionnaires in various parts of the country, the Census Bureau and the Postal Service are making special efforts to identify affected households and deliver the 1990 census forms within the next few days.

In developing mailing lists for the largely mail-out/mail-back census, efforts were made to obtain accurate addresses so the questionnaires could be delivered. With nearly 90 million addresses on the list, some errors were made. Forms that have been returned as undeliverable because of this problem will be hand-delivered as soon as possible by Bureau employees. Residents are being asked to fill out the questionnaires and mail them back as soon as possible.

People in scattered areas should be aware that a census worker may be dropping off a census questionnaire on their doorstep.

Census '90 "Mail Reminder Cards" were to arrive at all households across the country about March 30, asking residents to return their census questionnaire as soon as possible. Households that haven't yet received a questionnaire should not be concerned and can ignore the reminder card.

Even though people are encouraged to return their questionnaires by April 1, Census Day, it is not too late to answer Census '90 after April 1, and there are no penalties for returning the questionnaire after that date.

Even if a household never receives a census questionnaire in the mail, it will be counted in Census '90, the nation's 21st decennial census. Beginning now and continuing through June, census takers will visit households that have not returned a completed form.

Did you know?

Wayne High School requires students, who know in advance that he/she will be absent from school to complete all classwork prior to departure. He/she will be issued a pre-make up slip to be completed and signed by teachers involved with classes to be missed. The student submits the signed pre-make up slip to the central office.

Failure to complete this process results in an unexcused absence being issued in which case students receive a failing grade or they must complete make-up time for school classes missed.

Other types of unexcused absence include: oversleeping, shopping trips, hair appointments, and unauthorized attendance at tournaments, etc. during the school hours.

An excuse form issued by a parent for an absence does not necessarily mean the school will excuse that absence.
