French see U.S. farms up close

"That's too much," said local award-winning dairy producer John

Anderson, as a group of visitors from France began asking him questions in their home language.

The group of about 40 farmers from France are on a two-week tour of the United States. The French farmers, composed mostly of grain producers from an area north of Paris, visited the Anderson farm Thursday in a move to learn more about agriculture in the United States.

From the Anderson dairy facil-ity, the group made one more stop in Wayne County before departing to Sioux City. From Sioux City, they will make several stops in lowa before heading to Milwaukee, Wis.

and Chicago.

"They've been very impressed," said Larry Zimmerman, of the Ne-braska Farm Bureau. "They've had a chance to visit first-hand with Nebraska farmers. They've dis-cussed financing and they're inter-ested how American farmers finance their land and deal with in-terest rates."

ACCORDING TO Zimmerman, the French people said interest rates in the European nation are higher than they are in the U.S. He also said many of the farmers produce their crops on smaller acreages of land than those found in the U.S. "We're discovering," said Patrice D'Assignies, a farmer and travel agent touring with the group as their interpreter. "Many of them have never taken a plane, so this is opening their eyes to systems of farming they've never thought of.

One thing they've been impressed with is the size of the farms."

with is the size of the farms."

D'Assignies, who is from the same area in France as the rest of the group, was the only one to speak fluent English.

"We've been surprised by the practicality of the farmers," he added. "U.S. farmers have bigger machinery but fewer tools. It has really surprised us that American farmers are so practical."

According to Anderson, many of the farmers weren't really all that interested in dairy production. He said he was surprised by some of the questions they asked.

of the questions they asked.

"Basically, they asked how dairy carried on," he said. "They is carried wanted to know about our bi-product feed and how our breeding efficiency is. Surprisingly, they weren't intcrested in milking times. Apparently, they milk all the time but in France, the average cow collects a little less per cow than one in the U.S."

THE GROUP TOURED two grain farms in Saunders County and a feedlot in Uehling before making their stop at Anderson's farm. Wednesday, the tour was in Kansas, which was something dif-remarks, Winch was something dif-ferent for them.

"What we've seen in Nebraska is very much what they thought American farming would be," D'Assignies said. "In Kansas, it was much different."

D'Assignies did not elaborate on the difference the French group found in Kansas.

According to Anderson, though,
the tour was something he

Fair Board looks at museum idea

As Marvin Fuoss' interest in antique farm machinery was passed over by the Wayne City Council years ago, the Wayne County Fair Board picked up on it.

If things go as planned, Fuoss' interest may expand to involve this summer's Wayne County Fair Aug. 2-5. The Wayne County Fair Board has organized a campaign to collect antique machinery, planned to be on display at the fair.

According to Leland Herman, committee chairman for the fair museum, efforts by the board are being done to save a part of the area's heritage.

"The idea behind it is that the Wayne County Fairgrounds should

In the last 40 years, we had machinery that would barely work and now they've got machinery which will harvest 18-24 rows at a time. Some of the items already collected include a walking cultivator (commonly called a 'joker'), donated by Fuoss. The product originally came on the market about 1913 and sold new for $12.98.

The reason they called it a 'joker' was because the way it worked was really a joke," Herman said. ""It was a machine that shouldn't have worked but it did."

ALSO AMONG the collectors items is a Case Sulky plow manufactured around 1913 at a list price of $27.85. It was donated by Robert and Dale Hansen. In addition to being on display at the Wayne County Fair in Au-gust, the machinery will be on dis-play at the Winside Centennial scheduled for late July. Most of the machinery there belongs to Fuoss.
