START housing committee sets plans

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

As the START housing task force continues its work on settling housing problems in Wayne, a solution may be close at hand, according to housing task force chairperson Fannell Bennett.

The housing task force decided Wednesday to become a pilot program for the Nebraska Department of Economic Development (DED).

Becoming a pilot program means the department of economic development is gathering resource material addressing housing issues for cities the size of Wayne.

Part of the data gathering process will include questionnaires being sent to local industries to find out what their short-term as well as long-term housing needs are, Bennett said.

SHE ADDED that by determining what housing needs exist, START and the DED will be in a position to offer guidance to the construction industry, realtors and financial institutions.

"One of our main concerns is making housing affordable," she said. "The data we get may indicate that building regulations need to be changed in Wayne or it could tell us an entirely different story. At this juncture, we just don't know."

Some of the areas Bennett said the housing committee believes need attention is low income housing and suitable housing for young married couples.

She said since there is some variation in what members of the housing committee believe the needs are, the survey of local industries is a good alternative; especially since Wayne is being used as a pilot city but the DED.

"We're so iffy because we're talking about a lot of money here," she said. "We need to have data to support the need so we know how the needs can best be met."

"I think we're taking a cautious approach because we don't want money invested on our speculation. We need data that will support housing development for the next several years."

BENNETT SAID the unique thing about the approach the START task force is taking, is that if housing needs continue to grow and the market is saturated in five years, the same plan can again be implemented.

"There's little doubt that the need is immediate," she said. "But our tools being developed can be used again if they work. In a few years, we can review them and see where we're headed."

DATA WILL BE analyzed by the DED once it is gathered. It will go

DESPITE BEING A LITTLE bit big for Michael McQuistan, Pender, and eighth grader at the District #25 school, NASA's Gordon Eskridge is able to point out some of the specifics about a space suit.

Educators learn about new technology

WAYNE - Area people got a chance to learn a little bit more about NASA this past week when Gordon Eskridge presented two days of programs at Wayne State College.

Eskridge, an information and educational consultant for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Houston, addressed issues ranging from NASA technology to uses of satellites. He said despite news reports that NASA is in trouble, there's little reason for concern.

He said despite finding what seems like a number of flaws in the shuttle program as well as the Hubble-space telescope, the setbacks are temporary.

HIS PURPOSE OF being at Wayne State, however, was not to calm people's fears about the space program but to educate teachers about scientific findings.

"We tell them how to get materials from NASA, the FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) and Department of Transportation," he said. "We also let educators know about the NASA camps that are available to young people from fourth grade to sophomores in college."

Eskridge said satellite programs are rapidly becoming the future in education. He said part of his job is to educate people how to access those programs. In addition, the programs are available to the general public if the local cable TV outlet carries the channel.

"By watching the NASA Select, people can see what's going on each day at NASA," he said.

ESKRIDGE SAID the program, in its 31st year, sends out about 40 former classroom teachers to provide educators in the region information they can use in the classroom. He said in his work, he covers New Mexico, parts of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, parts of Colorado, Nebraska, South Dakota and North Dakota.

"The reason I got into it is because when I started teaching in the mid-70s, I had a textbook that said 'we'll soon be sending a man to the moon' and that was almost 10 years after it had happened," he said. "When I first discovered that, I contacted NASA and after seeing a man do something similar to what I'm doing, I applied to get onto the program and I did."

NASA's immediate plans are to establish a life science station in space to find out how well plants and animals are affected by the lack of gravity. He said the new station will be the first of its kind since Skylab experiments in 1973-74. He said the mission, aboard a shuttle, will last for about two weeks.

ALL IN ALL, NASA is on the right track, Eskridge said. Since the Challenger explosion, and the 22 months following, the space program had time to catch up. He said the government, the public, as well as the news media, need to understand one thing: the shuttle is a research and development vehicle.

"We're constantly making improvements to it," he said. "It's just that some of the things we did with it originally work better than the things we've changed. We're experimenting with it to see what works and what doesn't. It's a research and modification model."

Vakoc: Time is all that's needed for local investors

WAYNE - The housing market is changing and the time isn't far away that investment real estate will be a reasonable thing to do, but right now, that's not an option, according to John Vakoc, a member of the START housing task force.

The trick to seeing investment property worthy of investors dollars is for the market to begin appreciating rather than depreciating, he added.

Vakoc said the problem with providing rental real estate is that investors can't see a return on their dollar. He said investors find that investing their money in CDs or the stock market is better for seeing money earn interest. Investing in the real estate market, however, doesn't result in a return.

"It's a grim picture for the moderate-income renter," he said. "For low income people, there's government programs available which cover for development."

One such program is through the Farmer's Home Administration (FmHA). He said the FmHA guarantee is government subsidized for three-member families with incomes under $19,000. He said with the government's backing, lending institutions aren't afraid to make a loan because they know they'll be reimbursed in the event of default.

THE GOOD NEWS for builders is that government loan programs are available for rural builders.

Winside Centennial ready to go

Plans in place for 100 year celebration in Winside over July 20-22 weekend

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third article in a series leading up to the Winside Centennial July 20-22.

By Diane Jaeger
Winside Correspondent

Being thrown into jail might not be as bad as you would imagine — if it's Winside's Centennial Kangaroo jail.

"Any man not sporting some sort of facial wear or wearing their Brothers of the Brush or Shavers Permit button during the three day celebration has a good chance of being escorted to it (jail)," says Dan Westerhaus, chairman of the Brothers of the Brush. "We have a sheriff (Terry Thies) and deputies as well as a judge (Don Nelson). A fine of up to $5 will be appointed at their trial and must be paid by a friend or relative upon their release."

For those brave souls who cultivated some sort of facial bristle — judging will be done on Saturday at 1:30 p.m. Plaques will be awarded to the fullest, best trimmed, most kissable, best mustache, whitest, reddist and ugliest.

Colored beard categories must be grown without any color pigmentation.

Plans for the centennial started in the fall of 1987 when Veryl Jackson and Daisy Janke were elected as co-chairmen for the event. From there, additional officers were elected and individual committees with chairmen were set up.

A COMMITTEE of seven began working on a centennial edition of the "Winside History Book" in 1986. Today, the book is in its final stages of being printed. It will include approximately 700 family histories and many, many old and new photographs including the Winside centennial celebration.

"It takes a lot of time and the talents of many individuals to plan a celebration for three days," says Veryl Jackson. "You have to consider the interests of all age groups to keep things moving for everyone."

According to centennial officials, the work was sometimes frustrating, as it seemed that the same small group of individuals were doing most of the work. The last few months, however, everyone has been getting more involved.

Although the opening ceremony for the celebration is Friday, July 20 at 8 a.m., there will be two events prior to the three day celebration. Janke said on Wednesday, July 18 the first Pageant performance "Thanks for the Memories" will be performed in the village auditorium at 7:30 p.m. On Thursday, there will be a talent contest.

THE HISTORICAL pageant was written by a committee of 10 with Sue Topp as chairperson. The committee was composed of nine other members and together, each member was in charge of a section of the pageant, which features the history of Winside, businesses, churches, schools, entertainment, sports and clubs. It will conclude with a military section.

The pageant centers around the home of Grandpa and Grandma Centennial, portrayed by Tom Koll and Corrine Morris and their grandchildren, who are visiting for the Christmas holiday.

A community chorus of about 40 area singers, directed by Eileen Damme, with Kim Damme as pianist, will present 12 selections through the pageant. A men's barbershop group will also present several selections as well as the Jaeger Trio. The Winside High School band and vocal group will also present special music. Despite a number of other groups performing, there will be 150 performers in all. Tickets for the production are on sale now at most Winside businesses.

On Thursday, July 19, a talent contest will be held in the village auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Twenty-eight performers are scheduled to display their talents. Talents will range from vocal, dance, instrumental, baton, tap and gymnastics. Approximately $1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded, including a $150 savings bond to the "people's choice."

PRIOR TO THE 8 a.m. Opening Ceremony Friday, a number of individuals will be running from Northside to Winside.

Northside is where the first community was started around 1884 by the railroad. After a year of disputing over its location, a large crew of men moved the town during the darkness of night on Sept. 13, 1885 to Winside's present location, according to Wayne County history books. It is believed that the men were so proud of their accomplishment that they said "Our side wins," therefore, Winside was named.

Also at the grand opening ceremonies, District 17 Sen. Gerald Conway will crown the centennial royalty and will serve the first piece of birthday cake.

Friday has been designated as "Youth Day" so many activities and special events are planned for the children.

Events for the children begin Friday at 8 a.m. when Dr. Sluggo, Denver, Colo., will appear with a variety show for the kids. He will also unveil Dr. Sluggo's A45 tooth brush. Dr. Sluggo will be played by Greg Lage, D.D.S.

At 11 a.m. there will be a children's parade on Main Street. Four divisions will be judged with prizes to be awarded. Pre-registration for the parade is from 10:30 a.m. to 11 a.m. in the park shelter area.

From noon to 2 p.m. children's games will be held as well as a sand volleyball tournament. Various events will compose the children's games.

At 2 p.m., bath tub races will begin for those 14 years and up. Teams will consist of four people with one sitting inside the cast iron tubs on wheels with three people pushing the cart. The event is expected to last until 4 p.m.

Also from 2-4 p.m. Alice Dietz, Norfolk, will be dramatizing and telling stories of Johnny Applesed. The event to help others feel better about themselves will be held in the city auditorium.

At 6 p.m. there will be water fights between area firemen and others followed by the second pageant performance at 7:30 p.m. At 9 p.m. a street dance with music by Headwind, will be held.

ALONG WITH THE activities scheduled through the three days will be displays by the people from
