Mike Spurgeon, a consultant with the firm, said the first three steps of the process are critical because they will determine whether Wayne area residents express a need for a community center.

The first three steps determine what age groups would see the greatest need for the center; a study of what people believe should be housed in it; and an ac-

"We don't want to just develop a plan that will go on somebody's shelf," Spurgeon said. "We believe our job is to help you." our job is to help you."

WHILE THOSE at the meeting expressed concern that a commu-nity center might be placed on the tax rolls, Spurgeon said there may be some unexplored alternatives to address that concern. He said it's a simple case of analyzing what resources are available.

"This process will make us look at two things: A, is the community center a good idea and B, what should it look like and how do we go about creating it," Spurgeon

What began as a nature hike for What began as a nature hike for two Wayne youth turned into an unsightly plea for help as they discovered that someone has been dumping trash in Logan Creek.

The two youngsters, Mandy Hansen, daughter of Gene and Karen Hansen of Wayne, and Stephanie Pickingaugh, daughter Stephanie Pickinpaugh, daughter of Tim and Jill Pickinpaugh of Wayne, made the discovery while mapping a nature hike for St. Mary's Catholic Church's Awana Club.

THEIR ROUTE took them from the Pickinpaugh residence at the end of Grainland Road to the county fairground road. From there, they headed south to the Logan Creek bridge. They each said what they saw surprised them.

"They've been teaching us in school not to litter and here we find grown-ups have been doing it," Stephanie says.
"It's sad. We're trying to keep the Earth clean but others are lit-tering it," Mandy adds. "To think that they're telling us not to do it

Participation indicates need to establish recycling agenda

If participation in the Wayne State College recycling drive is any indication of the need for a permanent program in Wayne, then it goes without saying that one is needed.

The small band of students, who organized the event through the WSC Campus Ministry, continue to see a number of Wayne area citizens participate in the week-long event. In fact, they are collecting enough recyclable materials, initial signs indicate that they will fill up the semi-trailer by Friday.

While the city council has put the wheels in motion for continuous efforts, Wayne residents need to encourage this committee to find ways to decrease the solid waste problem our community faces. The city council's committee is on the right track to nity faces. The city council's committee is on the right track to tackle this dilemma and there's little doubt that there is public Interest in recycling.

There are two things we would like to see established if continued recycling changes from the dream state to a reality.

One: monthly recycling drives held in each quadrant of the community with monetary proceeds going to community better-ment projects; and two: an incentive program encouraging Wayne residents to start recycling recyclable materials rather than tossing them in the garbage. A quick inventory of household goods would surprise residents about what items can be recycled.

If we continue seeing active participation in recycling efforts, not only can we do our part to save the environment but we might be able to avoid being told we have to do it by the state and federal governments.

The April 15 article in the Wayne Herald (Lawsuit Poses Threat to Funds) seems to have created some confusion regarding the personal property tax issue in Nebraska. I hope the following incremation will help clear up any formation will help clear up any formation will help clear up any misunderstanding.

'Great Dane, like hundreds of other companies across Nebraska, filed a request last year to have the value of its personal property "equalized" to the same percentage of value given to other personal property in Wayne County such as railroads and pipelines. In 1972, all personal property was taxed equally in Nebraska. Since that time, however, numerous exthat time, however, numerous ex-emptions have been granted by the State. In fact, there have been so many exemptions granted that today less than 25 percent of the personal property in the State is taxed while 75 percent is completely exempt. Great Dane is one of the few owners of personal property that pays the tax on the full value of all its personal property.

The Nebraska Constitution requires that taxation within our state be uniform and proportionate; in other words, all similar taxpayers should be taxed equally. For several years, the legal com-munity cautioned the State that Number aska's personal property tax system, if tested, would NOT pass this constitutional requirement. Unfortunately, legislators failed to address this growing problem. Fol-lowing a decision by the Nebraska Supreme Court in 1989 which led that taxpayers were entitled to have their personal property equalized to railroad personal property, hundreds of companies requested equalization before various boards of equalization. In March of this year, the Nebraska March of this year, the Nebraska Supreme Court reaffirmed a tax-payer's right to obtain equalization and held that Nebraska's personal and held that Nebraska's personal property tax system is unconstitutional. As a result, Nebraska's entire property tax system (real and personal) may be in jeopardy.

Although Great Dane was not contacted by the Wayne Herald for information regarding its April 15 article, the $75,000 in taxes that was reported to be at risk in that was reported to be at risk is inaccurate. At this time, Great Dane has only requested equalization of its 1990 personal property taxes. If the court finds that Great Dane is entitled to the same tax treatment, as railroads and Dane is entitled to the same tax treatment as railroads and pipelines, Great Dane will recover $31,000 in 1990 personal property taxes (not $75,000). It is important to note that Great Dane has been-aware-of-the-unconstitutional nature of Nebraska's personal property tax system for several years, but waited until 1990 to finally take action. Great Dane could not continue to stand idle and not continue to stand idle and request equalization. Such inaction would result in Great Dane having to pay even more in taxes in order to pay for refunds to railroad and pipeline companies. This would clearly be unfair, so Great Dane was forced to act in order to pro-tect its interests in the face of an eroding personal property tax base within the State: Like all Nebraskans, we hope the Legislature will finally address the personal property tax problem which has been ruled by our high-est court to be unconstitutional. The personal property tax paid by Great Dane is small in comparison to the other state and local taxes to the other state and iocal taxes paid by Great Dane and in comparison to the millions of dollars in payroll and local purchases it generates each year. These contributions are obviously very important to our Wayne community, and all of us at Great Dane are proud to participate in this effort. participate in this effort.

For those who may be interested, the County Treasurer has a small flier prepared by the State which illustrates how this problem of unequal taxation has developed over the years. It is a problem that the State knew of for several years but failed to effortively received. but failed to effectively resolve. Please encourage your legislators to adopt a tax system which at least meets the simple requirement of our state constitution that taxes be uniform and proportionate. Such action is now years past date. Such action is now years past due. As it has always done in the past, Great Dane will contribute its fair share (or more) to the city and county of Wayne, but a tax that is unequal and unconstitutional cannot be considered fair to anyone.

Response to letter

In response to Barb Hawkins letter of April 18 concerning the Winside Centennial Funds, had she taken her own advice and discussed her concerns with all the officers, she would have learned that centennial funds are still coming in from the sales of leftover souvenirs, pre-publication sales of the Winside History Book (which will be done real soon) and (which will be done real soon) and will also bring in more funds for the centennial account after it's completed. So Mrs. Hawkins, what's the big hurry to spend the money? As long as it's in the bank, it's making more.

Having worked closely with the centennial committee officers, I have no fear that they fully intend to give all Winside residents a democratic vote on how the funds will be spent. I know they are welcoming all suggestions by residents and will make a note of them until it is time for a final meeting to close out the books.

it is time for a final meeting to close out the books.

I would also like to encourage everyone to give these four officers a call, make your suggestions for spending the money when the time comes and be sure to tell them 'thank you" for the hundreds of hours of their precious time that they 'donated' to the Winside community since that first organizational meeting in September, 1987. I assure you, the success of a celebration such as Winside had a celebration such as Winside had didn't just happen by chance — it took a lot of time, dedication, organization and cooperation. # Hefner reviews taxes, child bill

By ElRoy Hefner
The Revenue Committee continues to work on the complex problem of solving the personal problem of solving the personal property tax dilemma that we are in. The Committee advanced an amendment bill that Governor Nelson proposed except for a few minor changes. This would remove all personal property from taxation except motor vehicles. It would be a one year temporary proposal. During the interim we would be working on a long term solution.

Two bills which will toughen child support enforcement were advanced to second-round floor debate this past week.

LB 457 would create automatic income withholding in child support cases where the custodial parent is receiving state social services such as Aid to Dependent Children or Medicaid. The bill also allows the court to consider the allows the court to consider the allows the court to consider the medical insurance coverage of the non-custodial parent, and add that to the child support amount. I have had complaints from some mothers saying that it was hard to collect child support payments from the fathers who left the home. This legislation should help this problem.

The other bill, LB 715, would require a review of child support payments to ADC families every three years, and would also allow-ing non-ADC parents to request a review by paying $1 for each re-

These bills are necessary to bring Nebraska into compliance with the federal law to ensure the continuation of millions in federal payments.

The Legislature decided that it will debate a bill that will abolish Nebraska's death penalty. Lawmakers voted 25-20 to bring LB 327 out of the Judiciary Committee where it had been deadlocked on a 4-4 vote. The bill would substitute a life sentence without parole for the death penalty.

I oppose the repeal of the death penalty because it serves as a deterrent, especially if we could limit the number of appeals. The recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling should curtail the number of appeals from now on peals from now on.

I feel the death penalty puts society on record that it will not tolerate premeditated murder and those who commit murder can for-feit their own right to live. In order for a punishment to be effective it must fit the crime. Anything less than the death penalty as a punishment for cold-blooded pre-modification must be in leffective. meditated murder is ineffective. Life imprisonment without parole is a farce. The Parole Board or Governor can change that.

Supporters of the repeal of the death penalty say other states have found that life sentences without parole effectively deter crime. They also argue that the state ought not kill any of its citizens under any circumstances.

Two diagnoses can mask child-abuse deaths

Child-abuse deaths can be difficult to spot, even when an autopsy is performed. Sometimes child abuse is mistakenly labeled Sudden Infant Death Syndrome — the medical diagnosis for unexplained

"A lot of people, they just hate the thing of going in and having their baby cut up."

Virginia state medical examiner David K. Wiecking, who says he autopsies 90 percent of his suspected SIDS cases, said he can diagnose SIDS without an autopsy. When the New York medical ex-aminer found a skull fracture and aminer found a skull fracture and accused the parents of abuse, they were outraged, Smialek said. An investigation revealed that the baby had been dropped on a concrete floor while being transported to the autopsy table.

In 1969, doctors from across the country convened in Seattle and defined Sudden Infant Death Syndrome. It was an unusual condition — one that could only be determined after an autopsy. Unlike other syndromes, which consist of a cluster of symptoms and findings, SIDS was defined as a constellation of no symptoms and no findings. The designation allowed researchers to isolate such cases into one group to search for a possible cause. No one yet knows what triggers the syndrome, al-though scientists now believe fetuses may be subtly handicapped while still in the womb.

But over the years, some coroners and medical examiners began to use the SIDS category as a dumping ground, throwing in cases they could not figure out. It became a convenient wastebasket for those who were too busy or lazy to tackle the toughest cases.

Munchausen Syndrome can injure children by proxy

Gannett News Service

Munchausen Syndrome is a severe personality disorder in which a person feigns or self-inflicts physical symptoms such as pain, fever, nausea or fainting. In Munchausen Syndrome by proxy, a parent or guardian uses a child as the surrogate patient to get attention for the

In the worst cases, a parent may injure the child to create symptoms, a form of child abuse. Other cases include: tampering with the child's lab specimens, inducing vomiting in the child or simply lying about symptoms in a healthy child.

The condition is named after an 18th-century storyteller, Baron von Munchausen, known for his tall tales.

One grieving SIDS mother in Massachusetts, who had rushed out of her house hysterical when she found her baby dead, discovered police on her doorstep when she returned home, said Mary Mc-Clain, Project Coordinator for the state's SIDS chapter. But two hours after the funeral, police knocked on her door, telling her they had received a tip that the baby may have been abused. The body would have to be exhumed.

The Farmer's Wife By Pat Meierhenry

As you know, I really dig staying at a Bed and Breakfast Home as opposed to a motel. Two years ago, in Rapid City; we had comfortable, quiet rooms, a hot tub ooking for a cafe.

Later that year, in December, we stayed in a gorgeous home in Kansas City which was right by the Plaza.
I've had lunch at Willow Way, on Highway 20 at Osmond, and marvelled at this new home built

I kept hearing about Plantation House at Elgin. I even knew jof, a couple who were married in the gazebo on the back lawn there.

Today, we were heading for Central City to visit the Big Farmer's sister. So we planned the trip through Elgin, got there about 11:30, and decided to stop.

It isn't hard to find. It's in the others that of the city and northeast part of the city, and overlooks the park. It really does look like a plantation, with four-huge white columns, a small balcony, and a portico for driving under cony, and a portice der. The owner, Merland Clark, was back vard, and gave us an in the back yard, and gave us an impromptu tour, complete with all kinds of history.

The first owner was George The first owner was George Seymour, who came to Elgin from Connecticut in 1888. He bought the acreage, with a small Victorian house, in 1892. That's going on a hundred years. He added to the house in 1907 and 1916. There are 25 rooms, five fireplaces, oak woodwork, leaded glass windows, and a beamed billiard room.

Mr. Seymour lost the house in 1929, when a lot of folks lost 1929, when a lot of folks lost houses and property and businesses and farms. It became a supper club and casino in 1946.

Some menus from that era feature filet mignon for $2.50 and catfish for $1.50. Apparently, that owner made a lot of money on gambling and neglected to report it to IRS. You know how that is frowned upon, so he closed down in 49.

Then it was a nursing home. And in 1972, a family bought it and began restoration. It is something to see. There is a narrow shelf above the wainscoting, antique furniture and collectables, a chandeller, and a collectables, a chandeller, and a sunken family room.

The former master bedroom is now a party room. They have Christmas parties there, and reunions; and last year, Pope John High School had its prom there.

They do not allow paper plates, cups, or table cloths. Some of the original furniture has returned to the mansion because Mrs. Seymour divorced her husband after he lost her dowry. She took furniture, and her dowry. She took furniture, and ended up bartering it for care. So, much of it stayed in the commu-nity and has found its way back to its original home.

The prochure says there are fine restaurants in the area, also golfing facilities. This looks like, a great place for relaxing, folks. The Clarks had just hosted a wedding rehearsal dinner on Friday picht, and the proom and a couple night, and the groom and a couple carloads of guests from Texas had stayed all night. I can tell it isn't very relaxing for the owners, but it's wonderful that someone continues to maintain this lovely historical home, and that they share it this way. Don't miss it. It's great.

When Not To Refrigerate Medicines

The cool environment of the refrigerator helps maintain the potency and effectiveness of medicines such as liquid antibiotics. Some types of rectal suppositories stay firm and easy to insert if stored in the refrigerator. And some liquid medicines taste better - or do not have as disagreeable a taste - when they are a taste cold. Generally, medi-cines should never be frozen. One might think that all medicines would last longer if stored in a refrigerator. But all medi-cines do not require refrigeration. The major problem is water - the water in the air outside the refrigerator. When a cold bottle or vial is opened in a warm, humid room, a thin layer of condensa-tion forms inside and outside the container. This layer of water inside the container can cause tablets to disintegrate and capsules to stick to-

Boxer shorts win first place

Speeden, a manufacturer of custom-designed novelty boxer shorts, received first place honors in the third annual Nebraska College Business Plan Competition. The business was founded by Mark Johnson, a 1990 graduate of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Second place honors went to Children's Coloring Cards, founded by Patrick O'Brien and Corinne Moreland, UNL graduate students. Joachim's Custom T-Shirt, by Joachim Kathmann, a CBA masters degree candidate, received the third place award. third place award.

The competition is sponsored by the Center for Productivity and Entrepreneurship at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln College of Business Administration. It occurred at UNL's Wick Alumni Center on April 11.

The first place award carries with it a $3,000 cash prize, and second place carries a $500 cash prize, funded by Donald Duncan and Duncan Aviation. The first three prize winners also receive

Certificates were presented to Safe Surroundings, a consulting and distribution firm for children's play-grounds, owned by Jim Hogan, a CBA senior; and Steppin' Up, a quality young men's store to be lo-cated in Wayne, developed by Lisa Reed from Wayne State College. They were fourth and fifth place winners, respectively.

The intent of the annual com-petition is to encourage college students to develop their en-trepreneurial ideas into viable new business ventures, said Robin An-derson, director of the center. Past recipients show the potential that exists for that to happen. Kelly Loneman, who was 1990 second place winner with his plans for Koala Tee, a screen printing business, has recorded sales of $400,000 the first full year of his Omaha-based operation.

Loneman will enter the international marketing arena this spring, when he starts serving as the sup-plier for Joachim's Custom T-Shirt. Kathmann will be headquartering his new business in Vechta, Ger-many, starting next month. This year's first-place winner,

Speeden, has been in business since October 1990, selling in three primary market areas: retail novelty stores, college campuses, and junior and senior high schools. Seamstresses contracting independently with the company produce the product.

The boxer shorts industry is experiencing renewed interest and growth in sales in a non-traditional market—younger women and adolescent youth, who wear the shorts as a casual garment. Speeden offers the option of cuslike a shirt pocket, designed like a shirt pocket, that is added to each garment. Johnson said he hopes to begin full-scale marketing and production of the Speeden boxer shorts later this year.

Children's Coloring Cards (CCC) is a unique greeting card designed for children ages two to 12. The black and white cards with CCC characters, which children can then decorate, are designed to provide an inexpensive way for children to personalize their gifts or communications.

communications.

Through his new business, Safe Surroundings, Hogan plans to evaluate existing children's playgrounds, and to consult regarding new playgrounds, identifying safety concerns and recommending safe concerns and recommending sare equipment. He will prepare pro-posed playground plans and pur-chase playground equipment and arrange for the purchase of the equipment for his clients.

In Steppin' Up, Reed plans to fill an apparent void in Wayne's retail community, providing a contemporary young men's cloth-ing and apparel store.

Reed has been responsible for the preliminary market analysis for this project. Serving with her on the store's development team are Lorna Smith, a resident of Wayne; Kenneth Hallgren, associate pro-fessor of marketing and en-trepreneurship at Wayne State College; and Roger Nelson, a former speciality clothing retailer in Wayne.

Sixteen individuals on 12 teams representing three Nebraska business' colleges participated in this year's competition. The teams were judged on the content and feasibility of their business plans as well as on how the plans were presented to the judges.
