Producers express concern over corn moth

AREA - According to the amount of phone calls received at the Northeast Research and Extension Center in Concord, there is great concern among producers over the high numbers of corn borer moth flights.

"The flights are much higher than they have been in the past several years," says Keith Jarvi, integrated pest management UNL extension assistant. "Considering the large overwintering populations we had, due to a large second generation infestation in 1990, this is to be expected."

Jarvi adds that the high moth numbers in combination with warm, humid weather means there is a potential for a heavy infestation of first generation European corn borers.

"The moth flights in northeast Nebraska have peaked with the numbers beginning to tail off," Jarvi says. "Egg masses were found on corn plants last week and some shotholing can be found at this time. The severe weather in some areas probably contributed to moth mortality and washed many egg masses off leaves." However, there was a lot of variability in the weather and survival cannot be accurately predicted from weather events."

JARVI CAUTIONS that there will be variability in development over the region and to treat each field as a separate unit.

The extension assistant says that the high humidities and warm temperatures the area is experiencing in its current weather patterns provide excellent conditions for larvae survival and are ideal for establishment of larvae in the whorl. He says that the egg masses are white, with five to 40 eggs and are laid on the undersides of leaves near the midrib. The eggs will hatch in four to eight days and shotholing, the feeding scars will be evident on the leaves as they emerge from the whorl. The larvae will remain in the whorl for seven to 14 days before boring into the stalk.

"First generation corn borers prefer taller plants for laying eggs, so the earliest planted fields will more likely have the higher populations," he says. Jarvi warns, however, that any field is suspect to the pests.

TO DETERMINE the need for treatment, Jarvi suggests scouting at least 20 consecutive plants in at least five different places in the field (100 plants minimum per field). The five field areas should be randomly selected and representative of the field as a whole. Also, the first plant inspected should be randomly selected, because starting at an infested plant will bias the count upward by 5 percent.

"Count the number of plants showing shothole feeding," Jarvi says. "That should give you a percentage of damaged plants. Since the young borers usually suffer from 60 to 85 percent or higher mortality rate, due to weather and predacious insects, an estimation should be the average number of larvae per infested plant."

Jarvi suggests that growers pull the whorls from the first and last infested plants on each set of 20. Unroll the leaves, count the number of borers in the whorl and estimate an average from the amount of plants inspected.

"Generally, fields with more than 50 percent of the plants with shothole feeding and an average of more than two borers per plant, will recover the cost of an insecticide application," he says.

THE DECISION to treat should be made after all the eggs have hatched but before the corn borers leave the whorl to bore into the stalk. He said most fields that are economically infested can be treated now. But once the borers have entered the stalk, control is not practical since the insecticide will not be able to reach them.

Town saves facility

By Mark Crist

A group of Wakefield citizens have raised more than enough money to save the town's bowling alley.

Wakefield needed to raise approximately $70,000 to save the Wakefield Bowling Alley and just over that amount was gathered. With the exception of a few, those who assisted financially in the venture are considered stockholders, rather than donors.

Officials close to the situation said although the money has been raised, they're still waiting to have the legal details worked out between their attorney Bill Horneber of South Sioux City, the Papillion Bank, Brentwood Bank of Omaha and Al Fey, the bowling alley's owner.

Wakefield residents respond to community effort to save the town's bowling alley.

ACCORDING TO one resident who helped lead the effort to save the alley, community pride had a lot to do with its success.

"I knew it would happen with organization," said Bob Rhodes. "There's a great deal of community pride that went into this. I knew if people knew how serious we were about this, they would want to participate."

Rhodes credits Myron Olson with much of the effort's success. He said Olson kept persisting that the need to save the alley was there.

Olson was one of three captains involved in the effort. The other two were Warren Bressler and Alden Johnson.

RHODES SAID the effort represented a wide spectrum of the community. He said in all, a large percentage of the investments came from Wakefield citizens. He said other investments came from surrounding communities and about 10 percent of the investments came from the M.G. Waldbaum Company.

"I feel real good that we've got the money together but I'd feel a lot better if everybody concerned were signed off," Olson said. "Right now the only thing we're lacking is having the names signed on the dotted line."

According to officials, the Papillion Bank is ready to go with the deal. The two things holding up the final parts of the process are the Omaha bank and Fey's role in the transaction.

"We're happy this is progressing as well as it has," Olson added. "At this time, we can't tell you much more than the fact the money's been raised."

Pamida donates funds to drug free youth camp

WAYNE - The Pamida Foundation has donated $1,000 to the "Proud to be Drug Free" youth retreat being held at Wayne State College June 25-28.

One-hundred thirty youth representing 13 drug free youth groups from northeast Nebraska are participating in this retreat.

"These generous donations help all the kids involved in the various school programs," said Corrie Kielty, drug-free project administrator of Goldenrod Hills. "We're paying the money primarily to assist paying for the retreat but the money will benefit all the state's programs."

Groups represented are Allen, Bancroft/Rosalle, Battle Creek, Crofton, Elkhorn Valley, Hartington Public, Hartington Cedar Catholic, Madison, Norfolk Catholic, Plainview, South Sioux Senior High, Stanton and Verdigris.

THE ALCOHOLISM and Drug Abuse Council of Nebraska (ADACN) sponsors the four day retreats with the goal of establishing drug free youth groups in communities. Last August, the Wayne FRIENDS (Facts Raising Interest Ending Needless Drugs) attended the retreat held in Fremont.

Participants are kept busy with educational and fun activities. These youth learn why their alcohol, tobacco and drug free commitment is important to themselves and their community. Youth learn how to bring the drug free message to other students.

In an effort to keep the statewide network of youth alive and growing, Pamida has assisted in making this retreat possible. Other Wayne businesses contributing are Pac 'N' Save, Quality Foods, 7-Eleven and Hardee's.

The retreat was made possible through a federal grant which allows Goldenrod Hills Community Action Agency, the School Community Intervention Program and ADACN to provide drug free youth retreats, parent training, school intervention training and community awareness to the area through the Northeast Nebraska Intervention/Prevention Project.

Allen puts best foot forward for centennial

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

When former Allen Village Clerk Pearl Snyder created the awareness in the community that preparations needed to be made for the Allen Centennial, the community responded to the rallying cry.

With just under two weeks left, most of the plans for the four day event are in place, thanks to much hard work by a number of Allen residents and the Centennial Executive Committee.

The committee is composed of seven individuals who have worked together following the first meeting March 9, 1989. Committee members include: Larry and Kathy Boswell, who chair the committee; Marcia Rastede, secretary; Julie Sullivan, treasurer; Gary Troth, vice-president; Doris Linafelter, public relations; and Rob Bock, the village board representative. Over 30 others are assisting in the endeavor by organizing the various events.

ACCORDING TO the Boswells, the community has truly shown that it is "One Small Town, One Big Family" as the centennial logo reads.

"We've tried to get as many people involved in this as we can," said Larry Boswell. "We've tried to make it so everybody can have a part in it." "People have cleaned up their lots, they've painted their houses and they've invited all their children home to participate," Kathy added. "We've been real enthused about the way the town has pulled together. The whole celebration has been an excellent thing for the town."

The logo was created following a community-wide contest. Its basic design was made by Allen residents Carol Chase and Fern Hansen. The various designs which were submitted have been compiled into a coloring book, which will be available during the centennial July 4-7.

Kathy Boswell said ideas for activities have been "borrowed" greatly from towns west of us like Osmond and Winside. Representatives from the Emerson Centennial Committee also provided input to the Allen Community Club.

THE BOSWELLS said the town and the Centennial Committee have likened the event to a pregnancy. Since they started three years ago, they said it's like the community is in its third trimester and the due date is rapidly approaching.

One of the reasons for the apparent success has been because Allen is working the committee toward one common goal: to provide the community with a new rescue unit. With that goal in mind, any proceeds will be used to purchase a new rescue unit, which the town has expressed a need.

"The other day, I was working with the cultivating needs for the Warners," Kathy said. "When there's something for the community to pull together on, they usually do. We're known for being there when we need to be. When there's a tragedy or when something needs to be done, the people know that everyone has to work together."

The Boswells said there are four primary businesses sharing the load for the centennial. They said funds are coming from Logan Limited Feed Yard, Farmer's Coop of Allen, the South Sioux City Coop and Security National Bank.

Boeckenhauers honor 100 years

Castle Family gives show for celebration

WAYNE - The Castle Family, one of America's most entertaining musical variety shows, will headline the Boeckenhauer celebration of the 100 year history of their family farm on Saturday, June 29 at 8 p.m. at the Wayne County Fairgrounds.

Moe and Dee Boeckenhauer are the current owners of the farm, which was purchased by Alfred Haglund in 1891. The farm was later inherited by his daughter Lydia Haglund Boeckenhauer, then owned by her son Robert and in 1978 purchased by Maurice.

The Castle family, five energized musicians from Minneapolis, Minn. will present a fast-paced show that features a Big Band medley, a brother's medley, country, contemporary rock tunes, golden oldies, Dixieland favorites and pop hits from the recent past. The multi-talented Castles move around the stage between songs, taking turns at playing different instruments for just the right sound with more costume changes than songs and more gags than solos.

Most of the Castle's concerts are shows for state fairs and corporations like IBM, RCA or General Motors, but they are working more and more as a warm-up group for big-name performers. They have opened for The Lettermen, comedian David Brenner and country singers Tammy Wynette and Marie Osmond.

The public is invited to attend this night of fun.

THE CASTLE FAMILY will perform June 29 at the Wayne County Fairgrounds.

tered for control of first generation European corn borers and most will do a good job if applied properly at the right time," Jarvi says.

The liquids Pounce, Ambush, Dipel, Pennacp-M and Lorsban applied through a center pivot should provide excellent results.

"We discourage growers from applying liquids by ground rigs because generally there is not enough water carrier to penetrate deep into the whorl to where the larvae are," Jarvi adds.

He says that if growers have to use ground rigs or aerial spraying, Dipel, Furadan, Lorsban, Diazinon, Dyfonate and Pounce granules will do well provided growers make sure the granules are getting into the whorl. Jarvi says that ground rigs that concentrate granules into the whorl may allow rates to be lowered. The granules must enter the whorl to be effective and label instructions on all insecticides should be read carefully.
