Vehicles totaled in mishap

Youth escape serious injury in Wakefield accident

An accident Tuesday night totaled two vehicles near Wakefield but neither driver was hurt badly.

According to Nebraska State Patrol Sergeant Dick Blausey, the accident occurred along Highway 35 along the Wakefield city limits Tuesday around 6:15 p.m. Involved in the mishap were Heather Gustafson, 17, of Emerson, and Angela Hicks, 17, of South Sioux City.

According to Blausey, both vehicles were southbound on Highway 35 when Gustafson prepared to make a left-hand turn onto the Golf Course Road when Hicks attempted to pass. As a result, Hicks broadsided the Gustafson vehicle and rolled over into the ditch. The Gustafson vehicle also went into the ditch but it did not leave its wheels.

The Nebraska State Patrol sergeant said Hicks was taken to Providence Medical Center in Wayne and treated for minor injuries and released. Gustafson was not injured. Neither party was wearing seat belts.

Vehicles totaled in the accident were a 1977 Ford, driven by Gustafson, and a 1977 Oldsmobile, driven by Hicks.

STRONG WINDS SUNDAY NIGHT tore back the roof on Wayne High School's gymnasium. Officials are uncertain why it happened. A related story is on page 6A.

Winds reek havoc

Storm makes mess of high school roof

By Mark Crist
 Managing Editor

While there was no structural damage to the Wayne High School gym, custodial crews were busy picking up the fragments of the gym's roof Monday and Tuesday.

According to Wayne Superintendent Dr. Francis Haun, custodial crews came in at 10 p.m. Sunday to clean up the gymnasium's floor. Haun said the damage was caused when the wind, ranging in speed from 50 to 75 mph, loosened ties used to hold down the gym's roof. He said the west half of the roof blew over onto the east half and scattered 4x8 sheets of insulation as far as four blocks away.

"We were very fortunate this wasn't worse," he said. "The rest of the high school's roof is the same except it's held in place by a rock cover. The gym roof was different in the fact it was tied down by mechanical ties, and it didn't have that rock cover."

THE ROOF, which replaced the original covering in 1988, cost $46,000. It was put in as part of a weatherization program paid, in part, by grant money.

Haun said Tuesday that the insurance company and the roofing company were negotiating a settlement. He said he was uncertain whether the entire roof would be replaced or if it would be repaired.

In addition to having all custodial crews come in Sunday night, members of the Wayne-Carroll school board toured the building to determine the damage. While the damage was minimal, water from Sunday's storm did leak through the maple wood floor into the art rooms in the basement of the building.

City Council OKs addition

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

Wayne's City Council gave preliminary approval to the Vintage Hill Addition, a plat of land owned by David Gardner. The land, located north of the Wayne America water tower which extends from 14th Street to Country Club Road and from farm land owned by Virgil Kardell to the Wayne Country Club, will be developed in phases, according to City Administrator Joe Salitros. Gardner purchased the land in 1991 with intentions of developing it for residential use. With acceptance of the Vintage Hill plat, the Wayne Child Day Care Center may soon find out where it will be located. In addition, development of the land for residential use could occur as soon as July or August, depending on the speed of the plat approval and availability of contractors. Salitros told the council that the plat had been given preliminary approval by the Wayne Planning

Bids let for projects

R&W Construction of Wayne edged out last year's bid winner of the sidewalk improvement project by $3,200. R&W Construction's bid of $54,550 came in under Christensen's bid of $57,775, according to Wayne City Administrator Joe Salitros. As a result of the lower bid, R&W Construction will be doing the sidewalk improvements this summer. One of the reasons R&W Construction didn't bid on the project last summer, Salitros said, is because the project was done later in the year. He said the lower bid this year will save homeowners approximately 10 cents a square foot. With the bid, under estimates, the 24,600 square foot project will cost homeowners between $5.10 and $5.15 a foot. In a separate matter dealing with bids for the city's electrical distribution improvement project, the Chris Davis firm of Fremont received one bid for $36,567, which was the low bid for a portion of the project, and Wesco of Sioux City won the second half of the bid.

Commission with corrections to the suggested map. Included in the preliminary map is a water retention area in the northwest corner of the land, which could be used for water runoff. Salitros said that the runoff would go from the retention area to Dog Creek.

In another item, which pertains to the Vintage Hill plat discussion, the city council directed staff to develop an annexation plan for the city. The plan would include annexation of land southwest of the Sunnyview Addition, land north of the Sunnyview Addition, the Boyle Addition, the Vintage Addition, land surrounding the Wayne America water tower, owned by the city, and land along Highway 15 south of the back nine of the Wayne Country Club.

Officials bugged

Damage stuns school board

Architects, engineers, roofers, insurance adjusters and school officials are all scratching their heads over the storm-damaged roof at Wayne High School. The only real question to be resolved after Monday's storm left the school's gym with bare boards for a roof was who was NOT going to pay for repairs. Taxpayers won't foot the bill. Either the insurance company, the roofing company or their associates will be paying for the repairs, according to Dr. Francis Haun, school superintendent.

Other recommendations by the committee were taken under advisement by the board. Included among the recommendations: •that Apple IIe computers be moved out of elementary classrooms and relocated to the typing lab at the high school. Elementary students would then be taught organized keyboard skills and basic computing in the high school. There are no other rooms with sufficient electrical and organizational areas other than the high school, the board was told. Elementary students need concentrated introduction to keyboarding and basic computing skills the board was told.

The rubberized roof installed on the gym in 1988 had a 10 year guarantee. But there were some exception clauses for wind damage. The insurance company and the roofers will be discussing those exceptions at length, according to Haun. Engineers and architects were in Wayne Wednesday to help design and test new methods for installing and anchoring the new roof system, said Haun.

In the mean time, he said temporary repairs have been made to keep water from leaking into the gym. He added the building should be safe until permanent repairs can be made "barring another high intensity wind." Haun estimated that two-thirds of the roofing material had been removed from the building by the storm. Technology for the Wayne Public Schools was high on the agenda for the school board Tuesday evening. Board members heard the study report and recommendations from the district's technology committee and approved one of the recommendations which centers around computers and their uses in the schools. The board approved a plan to give Middle School students access to the Internet Computer System through Wayne State College beginning this fall. A dedicated phone line will be installed to connect computers at the Middle school with the college's information network. The school already has the necessary computer equipment and teacher training will be completed for use of the library service access by next fall. The system will give students very fast access to a wide variety of college database information worldwide, said Richard Metteer, Middle School principal. He presented the committee's report to the board.

•to purchase an advanced computer and software to be used to introduce seventh and eighth grade students in shop and home economics classes to Computer Assisted Design (CAD). This would cost $4,200 but would expose all students in those classes to the industrial uses of computers during their middle school years. •implementing interactive video equipment into the schools. Introduction would cost up to $500 for a videodisc player which would allow students individually or in groups to navigate at their own pace through the vast amounts of information available on video or compact discs. •purchase IBM oriented computers for the high school to introduce students to the computers many of them will be working with when they enter the business world. Most schools now have only Apple-type computers available to students. •to forego the purchase of new elementary grammar and spelling textbooks budgeted for next year and spend the money for two Macintosh computers instead. Students would use the existing textbooks and would benefit from access to more sophisticated computers the board was told.

In addition to these recommendations, Metteer told the board and the public that if anyone had old Apple computers that they were upgrading to newer models, the schools would certainly accept the donation of the old model computers to provide more workstations for the students. The students would benefit and the people donating the computers could get a tax deduction, he said. The board members thanked the committee for its recommendations and promised to study the ideas in detail.

Denial or acceptance; favorite author helps columnist deal

Judith Viorst, one of my favorite authors, has written a book called Necessary Losses. The theory being that Loss is a part of Life. And I'm sure there is a grief response for every loss, big or small. Since I tend to be a bit scatter-brained, I'm frequently losing things. And I've learned to move quickly from denial to acceptance. Usually, it's only a matter of misplacing and I eventually find the item. For example, my glasses might be on the bedside table, the bathroom counter, the top of the refrigerator or under the couch. A pager is very difficult to keep track of. It's usually in my left-hand pocket. Unless, of course, I take it out and lay it on my desk, or on the shelf in the bathroom, or in my bag. I've been know to leave blood pressure cuffs in patient's homes and I have an especially hard time with keys. I've made several duplicates of the apartment key and one just disappeared out of my purse. My watch kept causing my wrist to itch, so I would absent-mindedly take it off and put it in a pocket. Then I would need it to count a pulse and have to dig for it. I lost it in March and it never did show up. I finally bought another one, a Wal-Mart special. Then, one night I dropped the car keys between the seats and found the watch. Last Monday night, I used my wallet by the phone. On Tuesday morning, I started to write a check at work. There was no wallet in my purse. "It must still be lying by the phone," I reasoned. I went home at noon. No wallet. I looked in the garage and in my other purse. I searched the apartment. Finally, that night, I gave up and called the credit card alert. The next day, I notified the bank. Some gray-haired lady could probably use my license as ID and write checks. I used my passport to write a check for cash at the grocery store. And I'm driving very carefully. I wouldn't want a patrol man to stop me. Fortunately, there were no photos. And very little cash. And it was getting worn. I smiled when I attended an in-service on change last week. The speaker asked us to enumerate the things nurses have lost. There was:

respect, professionalism, self-image. Then one plaintive voice piped up, "we've lost our caps!" And I laughed out loud in team meeting today when one of the nurses announced that her Hospice patient had lost her obituary! What a nuisance. She can't remember the name of the fellow she wanted to sing.

Geno's work starts soon

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

It appears as though construction may soon resume to the Geno's Steakhouse building in Wayne. Gene Claussen, owner of the steakhouse, said Tuesday night at the Wayne City Council meeting that he anticipates that removal of the top floor of the building will begin sometime next week. He said the primary holdup at this point is finding a place to dispose of the waste. "Since the last time we spoke, things have changed considerably," Claussen said. "Right now we have plans to start taking down the top floor by the start of next week. The metal inside the building is being taken out this week."

Following the fire, Claussen said he had planned to take down the existing building and replace it but that plan didn't turn out to be feasible. Claussen told the council that he plans to put a commercial business in the south portion of the building but he added that he doesn't have any plans to replace the steakhouse and lounge. He said preliminarily, he wants to clean it out first. While the south half of the building would be for commercial use, he said he hopes to have the north wing become residential. Originally, Claussen had hoped to renovate the top floor of the building to provide for residential living for the elderly. When a fire struck the building last September, destroying much of the top floor, his plans became nixed.

ONE THING that's changed, Claussen noted, was that the con-

Softball season begins on Monday at City Complex

The 1992 Men's Softball League will begin Monday, May 18 at the City Softball Complex in Wayne. Games will be slated on Mondays and Tuesdays throughout the season.

The Women's Softball League will also begin on Monday with a recreation style format. According to women's softball representative Laura Gamble, those in attendance will split into teams and play.

Each week women will be playing with different people so as one team isn't always the same. Women should gather at the softball complex between 6-6:15 p.m. with play beginning at 6:30 p.m. on the Northeast and Southeast fields.

The men's schedule on Monday night includes Lindner Construction playing Mert's Place on the Northwest field while the Varsity Lounge plays Farm Bureau Insurance/Dave's Glass on the Southwest field.

Tuesday's schedule has Sherman Construction playing the Black Knight on the Northwest field while Diers Supply/Lutt Trucking will play Great Dane on the Southwest field. Wayne Sporting Goods will play 4th Jug/Nutrena Feeds on the Northeast field.

All games will begin at 6:30 p.m. sharp. Forfeit times are 6:45 p.m. for the first game and 7 p.m. for the second game. Each team will play two, seven-inning contests.

Due to the fact that this year's league has six fewer teams than last year, several options are being reviewed to give the teams more games. Coaches of each team will be asked to vote for one of three options after the first three or four weeks of the season.

The first option is to have two position nights during the season while the second option is to have a mid-season bonanza which entails a double elimination (two weeks in length) format. The third option is to play three extra weeks after the rotation is complete with a blind draw to determine who plays who the final three weeks.

Coaches are also advised that forms will be available upon completion of the second game of each night in order to write the scores down and to give any additional highlights.

This will take a matter of five minutes and will greatly enhance the coverage of the softball leagues this summer both by the Wayne Herald and KTCH. There is a mailbox at the complex where the captains or coaches can drop off the results on their way out.

Wayne State's Future--

Saving people too

Practicing medicine today has become much more difficult for doctors and other health care professionals. A segment of the television show "60 Minutes" pointed that out clearly last Sunday night.

The same roadblocks big city health care professionals run into are seen here in Wayne. But residents of the Wayne area can be proud of the medical services they have grown to rely upon through their health professionals and the practitioners at Providence Medical Center.

Since it is National Hospital Week, we decided it was no better time than the present to salute our health care professionals.

Certainly, all of us have had the occasion to visit PMC — whether it be visiting a friend who's just had a baby, seeing a loved one fending off an illness or perhaps we have been patients ourselves. At any rate, we all know the excellent care we have received at the hospital.

Providence, like other hospitals, is doing what it can to help diagnose patients conditions through low-cost methods, whether it be through diagnostic imaging techniques, or visiting the regular specialists who visit the hospital from Sioux City, Norfolk or Omaha.

Perhaps more important, the hospital is continually doing things to serve its community. For example, PMC holds fitness, Lamaze and nutrition classes. It provides wellness clinics and it hosts the Goldenrod Hills immunization clinics. Like the rest of the field, Providence has redefined its mission to include areas once considered outside its realm: areas like substance abuse, family relationships, the needs of the elderly, child abuse or eating disorders. Most of us probably don't give much thought to the importance of the hospital unless we, or a loved one, ends up there.

But with the increased emphasis on its service region, Northeast Nebraskans need to build their awareness of the importance of the hospital. Not only do we need to take advantage of the services it provides, we need to realize it's a natural resource in our region. It is there for us to use, just like the water we drink and the soil which we farm. But like the soil and water, we need to take care of it and protect it.

Providing good patient care is, and always has been, the focus of the PMC. The hospital understands that continuing that tradition is vital to its survival but we need to understand the hard work that goes on in the corridors, the patient's rooms and in the labs each day. We need to celebrate our hospital and its employees.

As it was recently reported in the American Hospital Association Journal, "Save the whales, save the trees, certainly. But let's make sure we can save the people, too."

Capitol News--

We all could use racial sensitivity

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska
Press Association

LINCOLN - I think we were all watching in amazement last week as Los Angeles burned in three days of rioting.

Now personally, I think the verdict in the Rodney King case was a crock. We all saw the videotape. I know some are saying the jury saw more of the tape, including early portions when King was acting in a threatening manner. Such action on his part may have justified them taking him down, and hitting him a few times. Heck, we could all use a few shots now and then to clear our heads.

But by the time they had clubbed him, 10, 20, 30 times while he was down on the pavement, I think you have to feel a line was crossed somewhere. I think the racial slang the officers used on the radio afterwards also says a little about the attitudes these officers had.

All the rioting sure made me glad I live in Nebraska. Certainly nothing like that could ever happen out here.

But could an incident like that that incited the riot, a Rodney King-type incident, happen here? That is not so far-fetched.

Now this is a little subjective and touchy, but I don't think Nebraska scores very well on racial sensitivity scale. The reasons for that are fairly simple. We just don't have a lot of minorities. It's easy to stereotype people that you have no contact with, if you don't care to be open-minded.

I can remember one year going on the annual bike ride across Nebraska and stopping in a Nebraska town, which I won't name. I was one of 5- bikers along the ride, which included about a dozen blacks.

I remember a man stopping me on the street and asking whether I was having fun. "Lot of colored along, though, aren't there?" he said.

"Yes," I replied. And I was somehow managing to have a good time anyway.

I also had a friend who constantly would use the word "nigger," around me, even though he knew how it grated on me. He didn't even realize he was doing it.

When we were living in our own little insulated communities, such attitudes didn't cause that many problems.

But in Nebraska and everywhere, we are increasingly becoming less isolated. The last census has shown large minority populations moving into some of Nebraska's smallest towns.

The Hispanic community in Gothenburg was very upset recently over the shooting of a 23-year old man by a police officer. It will be up to the grand jury to decide whether the shooting was justified, but the feelings left in the community certainly point out the need for communication and understanding.

Recognizing the need, the Legislature this year passed a bill dealing with multi-cultural education. Now, it doesn't require that every school have a mandatory black history class. It just requires that schools, in their regular curriculum, include discussion of minority issues and minority contributions. An example: when studying the Bill of Rights, include a discussion about the efforts of blacks to secure their voting rights in the south.

The bill is probably a good thing. It certainly helps that we understand each other a little bit.

Now I'm no moon-beamer, but I thought something presidential candidate Jerry Brown said in Lincoln last week made sense. Asked by a Korean-born student how racial sensitivity could be improved, Brown replied: "It's real important that we white people realize that we are a minority on the planet Earth."

The views expressed in Capitol News are those of the writer and not necessarily those of the Nebraska Press Association.

A couple hundred friends of Wayne State College gathered together Saturday night after graduation to witness the launch of the college's second century.

The college kicked off a truly ambitious mission with Saturday's launch.

Plans are to raise more than $11 million in private donations to the Wayne State Foundation by 1994. The funds will be used for capital improvements, student scholarships and to allow expansion in other areas where the state budget will not permit growth.

A national, endowment-building campaign of this sort is unheard of in the state college system. But we can expect the other colleges to follow WSC's lead in future years, judging from the supportive comments of representatives of the state college board of trustees who were at the kickoff Saturday.

Before you write off the $11 million goal as pie-in-the-sky-optimism, consider Saturday's announcement by WSC Pres. Don Mash. He said over half of the campaign goal has already been met.

Thanks to the generous leadership gift of $1.5 million in cash from Dan and Jeanne Gardner; thanks to the estate gifts from three couples valued today at over $4 million and thanks to another $1 million in major cash gifts from other WSC supporters, the campaign appears destined for success even before it begins.

That's better than $6.5 million of the $11 million goal.

One of the host of eloquent speakers who commented on at Saturday's kickoff fete, Ted Tow, a member of the class of 1957, said he was sold on the campaign and the bright future of the college because of Don Mash.

Tow, a director of the NCAA, told the audience he thought the biggest problem in higher education today is institutions that misinterpret or overstep their mission.

"They try to be something they are not," he said. "Wayne State College is not the Harvard of the Midwest," he said, adding he believes the college is not trying to be.

"Wayne State is on the right road," said Tow, and that road is to provide quality higher education to

Letters to the Editor

Editorial was slanted

Dear Editor:

I was interested in your recent editorial regarding Channel One and am forwarding to you what I presume is the study that you are referring to in your article. Since you presented only half of the story in your bias account, I would ask that you give equal time to some of the other areas posed in the article. In fact, I have no problem whatsoever if you wish to print the entire account of Channel One's impact as enclosed. I believe that you will find therein some other perceptions on Channel One such as the lack of integration of the show within the subscribing school's curriculum and other areas that I alluded to in my paper on the subject. As you will perhaps recall, I noted that for the program to be vital it would have to have some integration with the subject matter being taught. I only ask you, is this a problem with the show or with the teachers who are showing it?

At no time do I believe that Channel One is a solution to the tremendous problems which face our nation's schools. In fact, I might also go as far as to say that the program content is geared more for junior high students than those of senior high age. As for the continuing matter of advertisement, I would suggest if you are going to be a purist on the subject that we then remove the apple labels from the computers in the school and the coke and candy machines as well, not to mention the local insurance agency calendars.

Rather than report the matter as opinion which is highly slanted to the students in Northeast Nebraska.

"I hope I never see the day when Wayne State's name becomes directional or hyphenated," he said to a few huzzahs and warm applause.

"The leadership of Don Mash is what draws me into this cause," said Tow.

He should know good college leadership when he sees it. He deals with college presidents all over the country as part of his job. His words were among the most impressive at the podium Saturday.

Gretchen Hirschbach, the chairperson of the Nebraska State College Board of Trustees, also was a forceful speaker on behalf of the new campaign.

She said the private funds will allow the college to "expand beyond the range of constraints of public funds and tuition."

She quoted one of the most famous Wayne State graduates, John Neihardt in touting the excellence of personalized, small college education.

"It is within your power to increase the margin of excellence," she said to the crowd, most of whom were key leaders from the region who were in town for the graduation and "Bright Futures" kickoff.

Statistically, there is a real need for private financing sources to support the college's mission. A 40 percent enrollment growth in the last three years has not been met with appreciable increases in funding. Tuition rates are going up to help cover the increasing costs.

So she did. "Young lady, do you realize how many bankers it takes to get a pound of brains?" the butcher is alleged to have said.

But a large share of Wayne State students come from low and moderate income families and from families whose parents never had the opportunity to attend college.

Help in the form of scholarships and student aid is needed to assist those students and to maintain the record enrollment growth figures the college has been posting of late.

The kickoff dinner provided an excellent opportunity for the community to reflect on the importance of the campus to the economic well being of the entire region.

The Bright Futures Campaign is a project every resident of Northeast Nebraska should support.

These young people and the college which gives them opportunity for their personal futures represent the financial, cultural and social future of the entire region as well.

The Bright Futures kickoff dinner provided one, slightly less excellent moment as well. When Bob Reeg, president of the Wayne State Foundation welcomed everyone to the evening's program he told a little story which bears repeating.

It seems Bob and his daughter were once shopping in an exclusive mall and one of the stores offered exotic meat items from throughout the world.

His daughter noticed a display of brains each with different prices. College professors' brains were cheapest, doctors' brains were slightly more expensive and a sign proclaimed the display of bankers' brains as the most expensive item in the store.

Reeg, a bank president, said he didn't want to sound boastful when his little girl asked why bankers' brains were so much more expensive per pound than doctors' and college professors' brains. So, he told her to ask the proprietor.

So she did. "Young lady, do you realize how many bankers it takes to get a pound of brains?" the butcher is alleged to have said.

might also ask the local taxpayers if they are willing to provide this same equipment to the schools should the Wayne school system decide to drop its contract with Whittle after the three years have expired. Have I not been reading about tax relief in your paper?

If you think you've seen something here, wait until Whittle opens up his Whittle Schools which will compete with our public schools in certain areas of the country and which will be run on a for profit basis around the year 1995. That should really give you something to write about.

In either case if you wish to give your opinion, do so, but don't just choose the facts that suit your soapbox. Give your readers the entire story.

The 'war' rages on--

Score is: Crist 0, dandelions 10,000

I have declared war and the first battle is over but boy am I paying for it.

I'm certain that if the Lower Elkhorn Natural Resources District, the Wayne County Noxious Weed Board or any other public entity were to see all the dandelions on my lawn, and all the efforts I've taken to try to kill them, my yard would be declared a natural disaster area.

Is there anyone out there who has the same problem?

I don't know what it is but this year the dandelions seem to be much worse this year than in years past.

THIS LAST weekend I started out with good intentions to try to eliminate dandelions from the one quadrant of my lawn. I succeeded only partially. I thought I had a fool-proof plan for killing those little buzzards but that plan apparently has failed. Just for your knowledge, I'll explain to you what my battle plan incorporated and you can see that it didn't work.

Phase one of the battle went over well. Almost all day Saturday, with the exception of the two hours I was working for the newspaper, I hand dug dandelions out with that two-pronged metal device designed to remove dandelions.

These metal devices are interesting little suckers. They're good for poking holes in the lawn and scattering dirt everywhere, but they do little for removing all of the dandelion root. I think the dirt that flies high into the air is probably what they were originally designed for, that way you could feel like a kid making mud pies and taking them inside the house-to-your mom.

ANYWAY, BY mid-afternoon my hand started to ache. The dandelions had scored a minor victory, your perspective, why don't you just print the article as it stands and allow your readers to form their own opinions on the matter. It might also be beneficial that you visited with some of the teachers at the schools in Wayne to see how Channel One is being implemented here since you do write for a community newspaper. You might also ask the teaching staff about the additional uses of satellite time for other non-commercial advertised programs on the Educator's Channel and the additional use of the dish of the additional 300 free hours under Whittle's contract with the Wayne Public Schools.

Rather than placing the whole blame on the program, perhaps we should consider other contributing factors as indicated in the article. In any case, 10,000 of our nation's schools is nothing to sneeze at. You because I had a deep bruise in the palm of my hand, but I had deflowered, at least, 10,000 dandelion roots. In some instances, I got the root and all.

Then came phase two. This was the phase which didn't work and it may result in more dandelion growth within the next three weeks. After tilling up one-fourth of the yard, centimeter by centimeter, I decided it was time to mow the lawn and see how well the dandelion spray worked to kill the stubs from where the mower had severed the flower from the plant. The mower did a good job of severing the flower from the stem and the spray smelled like it would kill any natural weed which would grow but it didn't do much for killing the dandelions.

AT THE writing of this column, it's four days later and I have more stems with enough seeds on them to fertilize much of Alaska.

In addition to suffering two setbacks in the battle of the dandelions, little did I know that those pretty but annoying pesky weeds have an ally. I have enough fly and mosquito-bites to light up Las Vegas, providing that they could do so.

This brings me to one conclusion. I think I'll stick to playing golf where the lawn is properly cared for, always green and seldomly afflicted with dandelions.

WSC choir holds concert before European venture

The Wayne State College Choir will perform an informal concert today (Thursday) at 6:30 p.m. in the Brandenburg Education Building's Ley Theatre on campus. The public is invited.

This concert is being given prior to the group's 3:45 a.m. departure for its European concert tour.

"We wanted to do something Thursday evening," says Dr. Cornell Runestad, director of the choir, "because we are leary of how many people will be up to see us off the next morning."

The two-week tour is the sixth by Wayne State singers since 1980 and they will perform in Germany and Czechoslovakia with performances in Berlin, Hannover, Prague, and Leipzig.

In Leipzig, the choir will perform in the historic Tomaskirche (St. Thomas Church) where Bach was an organist and choirmaster for over a quarter of a century.

Students will be housed in homes of local residents in Berlin, Hannover, and Leipzig. All of the singers participating receive a subsidy from the profits raised by the annual Elizabethan-Christmase Feasts.

The group will return May 29.

THIRD AND FOURTH GRADE STUDENTS at Carroll Elementary School, along with teacher Sharon Olson and Carroll resident Bessie Nettleton, top photo, are pictured with the Nebraska Q125 traveling banner which was displayed at the school on May 8 in recognition of the Carroll school being named an official participant in the 1992 Nebraska Quasiquintennial celebration. Mrs. Nettleton also is pictured talking to the students about life in Nebraska when she was growing up.

Carroll students study the 'old days'

By LaVon Anderson
Assistant Editor

Students in Mrs. Sharon Olson's third and fourth grade class at Carroll Elementary School are getting first hand information on what it was like growing up in Nebraska in the "olden days."

During the past few weeks, the students have invited several older residents of Carroll to visit their classroom and talk about life in Nebraska when they were growing up.

The guests were invited to take part in panel discussions and to share early stories on such topics as rural schools, books and clothing; games, toys and other forms of entertainment; farm machinery, tools, household appliances and furniture; gardening and food preservation.

"THIS IS what the children are doing in observance of Nebraska's 125th year of statehood in 1992," said Mrs. Olson, adding that Carroll Elementary School has been named an official participant of the 1992 Nebraska Quasiquintennial (Q125) celebration.

As an official participant, the Carroll Elementary School received a plaque signed by members of the 125th Commission, including Lieutenant Governor Maxine Moul, Secretary of State Allen Beermann and Senator Scott Moore.

The plaque states that the Q125 celebration will focus on the people, places and accomplishments of Nebraska, reflecting on the state's past, celebrating the present, and preparing for the future.

The school also received an official Q125 traveling banner to display for one day. The banner was hung at the school during the last panel discussion, on May 8, before being returned to Lincoln.

MRS. OLSON said the panel discussions featuring local Carroll residents have been extremely interesting for the children as they learn about "The Good Life" in days gone by.

She added that the idea for inviting seniors from the community to visit the classroom came about last Valentine's Day when youngsters sent cards to several older residents and then invited them to take part in the discussions.

Panel participants received a picture of themselves speaking to the children, along with a certificate.

Three Peptic Ulcer Medicine Types

An ulcer is any area of surface tissue that has eroded away. Ulcers can form on the skin, in the mouth, or inside the intestines. When they occur in the lining of stomach or tissue of the small intestine they are referred to as peptic ulcers. Ulcer treatment is accomplished with different types of medicines, and there are three commonly used peptic ulcer medicine types. Antacids such as calcium carbonate neutralize stomach acid. Antacids appear to work best when taken one to two hours after meals and at bedtime. The H2 receptor antagonists such as cimetidine and ranitidine block the secretion of stomach acid. Coating agents such as sucralfate form a barrier over the ulcer and promote ulcer healing.

We agree:

Shopping in Wayne just makes cents

Wayne Volunteer Fire Fighters Brooks Widner and Julie Melena know the importance of shopping in Wayne although their reasons for spending their money here differ.

Widner says he likes to stay in Wayne so he doesn't have to leave town. "Why would I want to travel out of town?" he says. "It doesn't make any sense to travel 30 to 50 miles to save $5."

Melena says it makes sense to spend her money here because the prices are competitive and with that, there's one more added incentive: she knows the people and they know her.

"They make you feel welcome in their stores," she says. "If you go into a store, they know right away what you're looking for."

Widner adds that he hopes people will do what they can to shop in Wayne. He says he thinks more people should do it, not only because Wayne's prices are competitive but for the reasons Melena cited: The town's friendly people make the difference.

That's why Shopping in Wayne just makes cents.

The GOLDEN YEARS by Pat Dickey

Ever since Social Security went into effect in the 1930s, people became eligible for monthly retirement benefits at age 65. This will change for future recipients, starting with those born in 1938. People born in that year will be eligible when they reach 65 and two months. Additional months will be tacked on in gradual steps for those born after 1938, until 67 becomes the age of full eligibility for those born in 1960 or after. People will still be able to request early retirement benefits at age 62, but their monthly benefits will be reduced according to the number of months remaining before they reach full retirement age.

Rose Quinn started her first job when she was widowed at age 62. That was in 1964, and at age 90 she still works at the electronics factory in Mount Kisco, New York. A few years ago she cut down to three days a week — so she could spend Mondays volunteering at a hospital and Fridays playing bridge. "I'm too old to retire," Mrs. Quinn quips. "Rose is an inspiration to all of us."

LIGHTNING RISKS

The risks of being injured by lightning are heightened when people are near trees, metal shelters and metal objects. Deaths due to lightning most often occur in water-related activities such as swimming, boating and fishing. When it looks like stormy weather, get off the boat or out of the water. Don't stand under trees and stay away from metal objects or buildings. We appreciate your business and we wouldn't want to lose a patient.
