Residents participate

Wayne County residents are getting more and more involved in what could be a potentially helpful tool in planning Wayne County's future.

At a meeting Thursday night at the Winside Auditorium, 22 individuals reviewed key issues facing the county and the respective communities during a meeting of the Wayne County Planning Steering Committee. The committee, which is working with the planning firm of Hanna:Keelan Associates of Lincoln, is directing its efforts toward a county-wide comprehensive plan and zoning ordinance for not only the county but the communities of Hoskins, Carroll and Winside.

Tom Malmstrom, of Hanna:Keelan, mediator of the meeting, addressed land use issues for the county and the three communities, commercial and industrial development, housing, transportation and public facilities. He also outlined goals for Wayne County in the year 2002.

"I feel good at this point about the county plan but I would also like to know more about the development of the communities," he said.

IN ADDITION to pointing out key issues, which ranged from well, head protection, groundwater, updating business districts, high-occupancy housing, feedlot sewage and smells, attitudes toward mobile homes, the need for additional rentals, police protection and health care, Malmstrom also discussed getting more citizens involved in the process. He also pointed out plans for a joint meeting with Wayne County officials and Wayne city officials, scheduled for July.

One of the ways he hopes to reach citizens in each of the respective communities, and residents who live in the southeast quadrant and rural residents around Wayne, is to hold town hall meetings. Those meetings will begin sometime in June, he said, with hopes of having them finished in a two month time span. Hanna:Keelan is also updating Wayne's and Wakefield's comprehensive plans and zoning ordinances.

INDIVIDUALS IN attendance brought forth issues they would like to see addressed at the joint meeting scheduled for sometime in July. Items residents said they would like to see discussed include: the future use of the Wayne County Fairgrounds, recreational uses of the fairgrounds, greater communication between Wayne and the rural areas to bridge gaps that may exist, establishment of a county tourism bureau, development potential, recycling, the potential for establishing an enhanced 911 service for the county, issues surrounding police protection throughout the county and health care needs.

The next meeting of the county planning steering committee has been set for June 25 at 8 p.m. in the Hoskins Fire Hall.

FATHER TOM McDERMOTT and Nigerian native Ike Anyaika spent this past week visiting Wayne. McDermott, a Wayne native, stopped in Wayne to see his parents, Evelyn and Charles McDermott.

Trip strengthens ties to homeland

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

Father Tom McDermott returned to Wayne this past week and this time he brought home a good friend.

Ike Anyaika, an attorney in Lagos, Nigeria, visited Wayne this past week with McDermott. Ike (pronounced Eeka) came to the United States with McDermott, so he could attend a spring lawyers meeting in San Francisco and a seminar in New York. Ike is one of 15,000 parish members in McDermott's church.

One thing which made the visit enjoyable for Ike is that McDermott's parents, Charles and Evelyn, are practicing attorneys in Wayne.

"I would like to pay tribute to Mr. and Mrs. McDermott," Ike said. "The atmosphere in their home is just like any other African home. The atmosphere, and the joking that goes on between them, is great. They make me feel like I am at home."

AS AN ATTORNEY, one of Ike's specialities is international law. He said he has dealt with a variety of topics from the unrest in South Africa to the aftermath of the collapse of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI).

"Some Africans feel that the national government in South Africa has not revealed its true colors," he said. "But one positive note is that 68 percent of the whites favor the reforms of President F.W. DeKlerk."

"Freedom is in sight. With the changes it's necessary to review the trade relations other nations have with South Africa and possibly lift the embargo that has been imposed."

While there isn't much difference between the way the U.S. court system and the Nigerian court system work, Ike didn't want to discuss American politics. He said the main difference between the two systems is that in the U.S., juries hand down many of the judgements. But in Nigeria, most of the judgements are done by a judge.

IKE STUDIED law in a 4-year program at one of Nigeria's colleges before taking on a one year professional course in law. From there, he received his law certificate after being approved to be a lawyer by the Nigerian Supreme Court.

One thing which has surprised Ike in his visit to the U.S. is the general ignorance Americans have about Africa and Nigeria. He said he believes Nigeria has a better family support system — one based on a higher respect for elders — than the U.S. has. He also said that it's not just the mother and the father who raise the children in Nigeria, it's the society.

McDermott said he has grown more accustomed to learning Nigerian ways. He said he is fascinated by their way of living.

"We Americans are very much into names but such bluntness and directness would not be acceptable in Nigeria," he said.

Waldbaums recovering

A fire that destroyed two laying houses at the M.G. Waldbaums Big Red Farms complex was "probably electrical," according to the State Fire Marshal's office.

According to Ted Helberg, human resources director for the M.G. Waldbaum Company in Wakefield, the Tuesday afternoon fire started in house five, which was being replaced from a fire in January. The blaze spread to house four, which killed between 113,000 and 114,000 birds. The house holds 120,000 birds. No birds were in house five.

With the heavy devastation, however, Helberg said the loss, combined with a tornado which destroyed a hatching complex south of Concord, and a fire in January, will not affect the M.G. Waldbaum Company production.

"It will cause some minor operational problems until we get the conveyor back on line but the number of birds lost is a small number of birds in the total operation," he said. "Anytime you have (consecutive) disasters of this magnitude, it's a significant loss. But we're a strong company and we'll be able to utilize our resources."

HELBERG SAID the company is grateful to the quick and strong response from the four fire departments which fought Tuesday's blaze. Fire departments from Wakefield, Wayne, Emerson and Allen-Waterbury responded.

Cleanup of Tuesday's fire started Thursday. Helberg said it is yet unknown when the conveyor belt will be operational again but noted that it took two to three days before it was operational after the January blaze.

He said one thing which will keep Waldbaums operations running smoothly is its dedicated employees.

"Our people are our greatest resource," he said. "I know that sounds like a cliché, but it is true."

Wayne woman petitions to get goose on stamp

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

If the U.S. Postal Service can spend millions of dollars to determine which Elvis Presley to put on a stamp, one Wayne woman feels why not make an Andy the Goose stamp.

Wayne resident Barb Holdorf has taken it upon herself to get the postal service to establish an Andy the Goose stamp. Andy the Goose was the ill-fated bird who lived in Hastings and was killed late last year.

What made Andy special was that he was born without feet. His owner, Gene Fleming, taught Andy to walk after fitting him with baby-sized Nike athletic shoes. After gaining national attention, Shriners used the footless Toulouse goose was used to work with handicapped children.

"I thought about doing this right after Andy was killed," Holdorf said. "Then I called Gene for his permission and he thought that would be great. He's done so much for handicapped children that this would be a nice way to salute him."

ACCORDING TO Holdorf, after Fleming gave her permission to get Andy the Goose on a stamp, she contacted the United States Postal Service. Since then, she has championed a campaign by writing letters to people in Omaha, Iowa, Illinois, Oregon, Colorado, Hastings and other areas.

Holdorf said her hope is that if she gains enough petition signatures, that Andy the Goose will be one of the next U.S. Postal Stamps issued. She has also had her story published in the Aurora Sentinel and a news segment was aired about the effort on KUSA-TV in Denver.

She has also had people volunteer to help out in the Wayne area. Among those offering to help out are Karen Keshick, Trishia Hard and Lori Mathes, all students at Wayne State. She said most people have supported the effort but a few have thought it was silly.

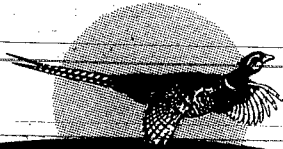

"I'm bound to get a little flack but you don't get something done without it," she said. "... I'm hoping that this won't get caught in the bureaucracy of the postal system. I just think Andy the Goose would be a nice way to salute Gene Fleming, the Shriners and Special Olympics."

Vandals causing damage

Reports keep police on toes

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

Recent incidents of vandalism in Wayne have police officers on the lookout for individuals committing a variety of crimes, according to Wayne Police Chief Vern Fairchild.

The most recent vandalism incidents occurred at the Bressler Park restrooms and the Victor Park restrooms. On Saturday, May 23, some individuals allegedly set fire to toilets in the men's restroom and just as recent, an individual or a group of individuals defecated in each corner of the restrooms at Victor Park, on the south edge of Wayne along Highway 15.

While the fire at Bressler Park appears cleared, and vandalism to a bus parked in Victor Park has been cleared, police are on the lookout for individuals who have been spray painting obscenities at various locations throughout Wayne.

"People need to tell us who they see, what they see and when they see it," Fairchild said. "Even if it's not their property that's being vandalized, somewhere down the line it's costing someone, whether it be the taxpayer or the homeowner."

The reported spray paintings, however, have gone unreported, Fairchild said. Two locations which suspects have spray painted obscenities are along the wall of the Morning Shopper and at the Wayne Municipal Swimming Pool.

Fairchild said he has no idea who might be committing the acts of vandalism throughout the city in some instances. He said random acts of vandalism, like have been seen in recent weeks, go in spurts.

The Wayne Police chief said the key to reporting the crime is when the individual looks suspicious. He said people reporting what they believe to crimes should not wait two to three days but they need to report incidents immediately.

"If something looks curious to you or if a situation looks strange to you, it probably is," he said.

Hoskins ambulance passes test

Dennis Svoboda of the State Health Department's Division of Emergency medical Services inspected the ambulance of the Hoskins Rescue Service on April 28 and found that it meets requirements for state licensure. Items inspected included: ambulance equipment, record keeping, maintenance. Dan Fulton and Perry Hoemann accompanied Svoboda and were provided copies of the inspection report.

Ambulance inspections are required by a law passed by the Legislature in 1975 to assure that ambulance services and rescue squads in Nebraska have the capability to provide quality emergency medical care for victims of accident or sudden illness. Ambulances are required to be inspected every three years.

Report gives Stanton home good marks for its services

The Stanton Nursing Home received a good report from the State Health Department after a survey conducted there in April. The surveyors found no deficiencies affecting patients' rights, quality of life, or quality of care at the home.

The nursing home was visited by two registered nurses from the Health Facilities Standards Bureau of the Nebraska Department of Health. Inspections are required by law to insure quality care for residents of health care facilities.

Frederick Wright, director of the Bureau of Health Facilities Standards said the surveyors appreciated the cooperation of the administrator, William Harris, the nursing home staff, and of residents and their families during the survey.

NSP probes accident

The Nebraska State Patrol investigated an accident Thursday morning at 9:55 a.m. six miles south of Laurel, which resulted in five individuals being taken to Providence Medical Center.

According to the Nebraska State Patrol office in Norfolk, a vehicle driven by Adam Cooper, 38, of Pine Bluff, Ark., stopped southbound to make a left hand turn to go north toward Concord when a northbound vehicle, driven by Johnny McWright, 38, of Lawn, Texas, apparently came over a hill, attempting to pass, and struck the Cooper vehicle.

Officials with the state patrol said the Cooper vehicle had two passengers and the McWright vehicle had one passenger. Cooper suffered a broken collar bone and back injuries. Passengers John Jeffrey, 31, of Pine Bluff, Ark. suffered head cuts and back injuries and Joe Jeffrey, 20, of Pine Bluff, Ark. sustained back and head injuries. All three individuals were wearing seat belts.

McWright, who was wearing a seat belt, suffered back and shoulder injuries in the accident and his passenger, Karen McWright, 39, sustained back injuries and cuts.

Officials at Providence Medical Center said three of the individuals were kept overnight for observation and all were in stable condition-Friday morning. Two of the individuals were treated and released. The names of the individuals kept overnight or released were not provided by PMC due to privacy.

The month-long exercise, conducted at Marine Corps Air Ground

Combat Center, Twentynine Palms, Calif. encompasses all the weapons available in the Marine Corps arsenal. Junck spent three weeks in a variety of live-fire exercises and small-unit maneuvers, which culminated into the CAX, a three-day realistic exercise set in an environment just short of actual combat.

Towns gather workers to work on RC&D program

Rural communities are struggling to develop strategies to create local jobs and preserve the quality of rural life. Community volunteers from Dakota, Thurston, Burt, Cuming, Washington, and Wayne counties in Northeast Nebraska have formed a steering committee to develop a Resource Conservation and Development Project (RC&D) in the region. RC&Ds, a program under the U.S. Department of Agriculture, assist communities in implementing economic development and natural resource conservation projects. Projects that are developed are identified through a planning process by RC&D councils whose members are local sponsors. The Department of Agriculture role is to provide a paid coordinator and office for RC&Ds.

"RC&Ds strength lies in assisting communities to work together for common goals. There are many issues faced by rural communities that can benefit from cooperative efforts." Said Kristie Thorp of Walshill, Vice-Chair for the Nebraska Loess Hills RC&D steering committee. The range of projects that are taken on across the U.S. reflects the unique needs of each RC&D. Nebraska currently has two RC&Ds in North Central Nebraska and the Pan Handle. Examples of projects the Nebraska RC&Ds have implemented include a Ranch Expo, daycare survey, National Grazing and Weed Conference, aquaculture tours, dry bean promotion, solid waste management project, and park and roadside projects.

The Loess Hills group has been meeting once a month to work on the project application to the U.S. Department of Agriculture and to provide forums to educate community leaders in the region about RC&Ds and encourage them to become a sponsor. The next meeting is scheduled for 1 p.m. June 3 at the Cuming County Courthouse meeting room in West Point, NE. Anyone interested in the RC&D project is welcome.

Report not good for Nebraskans

A survey of adult Nebraskans conducted by the State Health Department indicates that 17 percent have high blood pressure.

People with high blood pressure are at greater risk of developing heart disease, stroke, and kidney disease. Fortunately, high blood pressure can generally be controlled by regular use of medication and by diet modification and weight loss, according to the Health Department.

High blood pressure is a condition in which a person's blood pressure goes up too high and stays there. Blood pressure normally goes up and down with daily activities. Blood pressure that stays high all the time is a problem.

High blood pressure is especially dangerous because it has no clear signs or symptoms. A person can have it and not know it. But it can cause heart disease, kidney disease, and stroke. And the higher the blood pressure, the higher the risk. That's why everyone should have his or her blood pressure checked regularly. If it's high, it can be treated and kept under control with changes in diet or with medication.

One high reading does not mean you have high blood pressure. But you should see your doctor to have it checked again. If you do have high blood pressure:

- See your doctor regularly.
 - If you are overweight, lose weight.
 - Limit salt in your diet.
 - If you drink alcohol, limit yourself to no more than two drinks each day.
 - Take your medication every day. If you have problems, call your doctor. Don't stop taking your medicine by yourself.
 - Quit smoking.
 - Exercise regularly.
- Although high blood pressure must be treated for life, it can be controlled with proper care.

WSC plans program this week

Approximately 90 girls from throughout Nebraska will participate in WISE's (Women Investigating Science and Environments) third annual project at Wayne State College that began May 31.

WISE will hold two institutes, one from May 31 to June 20, and the other June 7-27. WISE will also be conducting projects at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and Chadron State College.

WISE is a young scholars program from the National Science Foundation. Its goal is to spur an interest for girls in science and to overcome some of the possible stereotypes for girls in science, according to Janis Greiner, coordinator of the Wayne State College site.

Parents, 'Did You Know?'

By Donald V. Zeiss

What's a kid to do when school is out?

Nearly 80 percent of your children's waking time is spent out of school. Now that summer vacation is approaching, does it make any difference how they spend their time?

It certainly does, says Joan M. Bergstrom, author of the book "School's Out — Now What?" Free time offers great opportunities for children to learn from new experiences and develop a sense of competence, self-esteem and achievement.

"These activities must be meaningful to the child," she says. "The activities should be carefully chosen on the basis of the child's own inclinations. Every child needs the chance to become good at something."

Bergstrom suggests that you ask your children questions to help determine what their inclinations are. What are they good at? What do they wish they were better at? What do they wish they could do that they don't know how to do now? What do they do in school that they would like to do out of school? What places would they like to go to more often?

In case you or your children have trouble coming up with ideas other than television viewing, Bergstrom offers literally dozens of creative choices for afternoons, weekends and vacations. Here are just a few of her examples.

- Athletic activities — badminton, tennis, baseball, softball, basketball, football, wrestling, baton twirling, bicycling, bowling, fishing, golf, aerobics, gymnastics, hiking, jogging, horseback riding, jumping rope, karate, kite flying, roller skating, skate boarding, sailing, swimming.

- Arts and crafts — cake decorating, calligraphy, drawing, mathematical art, watercolor, designing and making posters, mural painting, fabric painting, tie-dyeing, doll making, puppet making, carpentry, model building, sculpting, ceramics, quilting, sewing, photography.

- Dance — African dance, ballet, creative movement, folk dance, jazz dance, square dance, tap dance, modern dance.

- Music — band, chamber music, chorus, musical instrument lessons, song writing, voice lessons.

- Drama — community theater, role playing, play writing and production, set construction, costuming, face painting, clown lessons, magic tricks and card tricks.

- Civic and community activities — Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, YMCA or YWCA, 4-H programs, language clubs such as French or Spanish, library and reading clubs, computer clubs, hobby and collector's clubs, pen pals from another country, ethnic activities, American Red Cross programs.

- Outdoor and nature activities — camping, bird watching, backpacking, picnics, gardening, study and classification of wild edible plants, viewing stars and constellations through a telescope.

- Collecting — bugs, butterflies, rocks, shells, model cars, baseball cards, coins, dolls, stamps.

- Income opportunities — cleaning, babysitting, pet care, paper route, raking leaves, mowing lawns. Also, setting up own back account and keeping track of spending.

- Game playing — backgammon, billiards, card games, checkers, chess, cribbage, computer games, Dungeons and Dragons, Monopoly, puzzles.

- Special interests — cooking and culinary arts, genealogy, archeology, computers, home movie making, model car racing, learning a new language such as sign language.

- Religious activities — movies and recreational or cultural activities sponsored by church or synagogue, choir, special youth programs or clubs.

- Places to visit — airport, planetarium, aquarium, farm, zoo, botanical garden, bakery, car manufacturing plant, toy manufacturer, telephone company, computer company or store, courthouse or state capitol, historical site, museum, radio or television station, top of the highest building, parents' places of employment. (Many of these companies and other places offer guided tours for no charge or a minimal fee. Call and find out about them.)

- Family outings — parks, playgrounds, restaurants, circus, sports events, drive-in movies.

Perhaps after reading through these suggestions, and running them past your children, you'll manage to think up a few more. The possibilities are endless. You may even find that you and your children spend less time in front of the television set getting bored.

Local girl honored

The United States Achievement Academy recently announced that Lisa Ann Ewing has been named a United States National Award winner in cheerleading.

This award is a prestigious honor very few students attain. In fact, the academy recognizes less than 10 percent of all American high school students.

Ewing, who attends Wayne High School, was nominated for this award by Eunice Wacker, the cheerleading coach. Ewing will appear in the United States Achievement Academy—official yearbook, published annually.

Ewing is the daughter of David and Donna Ewing. Her grandparents are David and Marie Ewing of Wayne, Phillip and Marilyn

Opportunity to get in program starts

The next opportunity to enter land into the Conservation Reserve Program will begin June 15 and continue through June 26, according to the Wayne County ASCS office.

There has been a new twist added the past year that will affect CRP participants in the future; the birth of "Super Sodbuster".

A "Super Sodbuster" violation can occur if a CRP participant of the 10th or later sign-up periods reduces an agricultural commodity on highly erodible land (HEL) that does not have a history of being planted to an agricultural commodity other than a forage crop in the years 1986 through 1990. Producing is defined as planting an annually tilled commodity on HEL, according to Teresa Post, director of the Wayne County ASCS office.

UNDER THE "Super Sodbuster," alfalfa is not considered an agricultural commodity.

"If you have purchased HEL ground since Nov. 28, 1990, and are in CRP (even on another farm) breaking out alfalfa to be planted to an annually tilled crop may put you in violation of the "Super Sodbuster," Post said.

The ASCS director added that it will be very important to check with the ASCS office if you have had or will have a CRP bid accepted in the 10th or subsequent CRP bids, or have purchased ground since Nov. 28, 1990.

"If you have purchased or plan on purchasing HEL ground, you may stay in compliance with the 'Super Sodbuster' by planting newly broken HEL to crops such as alfalfa, multi-year grasses, legumes, strawberries and trees or shrubs," she said.

CROPS THAT are planted annually with one trip planter on HEL are not allowed on sodbuster land in this category. An example of crops not allowed on a "Super Sodbuster" are: corn, milo, wheat, soybeans, oats and rye, to name a few.

Individuals with questions concerning the purchase of ground when you have or are intending to have CRP ground, should stop in at the ASCS office to prevent problems down the road.

While living snowfences, wildlife habitats, more comfortable working conditions and decreased effects of cold stress on livestock are just some of the benefits of tree windbreaks and shelterbelts, several factors should be considered before establishing a windbreak for a feedlot, according to Terry Mader, University of Nebraska beef specialist at the Northeast Research and Extension Center.

"You have to take care that changes made to eliminate environmental stress during one season don't contribute to increased stress during another season. The same windbreak used to block winter winds can block summer breezes which help cool feedlot cattle," said Mader. "Summer heat stress can be much harder on animals than winter cold stress."

Rural route

Mader added that winter cold stress rarely results in feedlot cattle deaths, while death loss due to summer heat is more prevalent.

In a NU Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources study, cattle were finished in three different sets of outside feedlot facilities: (1) lots with a building for shelter on the north side, covering bunks and feeding area, (2) lots with a northern and northwestern windbreak and (3) lots with no access to shelter or windbreaks.

According to the three-year study, cattle without windbreaks or shelter did best. Cattle with shelter required seven more days on feed than those without shelter. Across all seasons, the steers fed in lots without shelter or windbreaks had greater gains and were slightly more efficient in feed conversion. An increase in quality grade was noted during the autumn months for steers without shelters and greater fat thicknesses and marbling scores were noted during winter months.

In a second one-year trial, with a colder and wetter winter than during the previous trials, sheltered cattle did better in gains and feed conversion but fat thickness, marbling score and quality grade were identical for all groups. Cold stress was particularly detrimental for cattle near finish when fed in the unprotected area.

"The experiments made it clear that summer heat stress, not always winter cold, can create the biggest feedlot problems," said Mader.

Additional data suggest heavier steers approaching slaughter may be affected more by severe cold stress than are lighter cattle. Generally, however, periods of extreme cold stress are of short duration and should have limited long-term impact on animals once they get adapted to normal winter conditions, Mader said. He added that during periods of extended stress, changes in management practices or facilities to alter the microclimate surrounding the animal will aid in alleviating the detrimental effects of such stress. Also, effects of environmental stress are diminished once cattle have had an opportunity to adjust to existing environmental conditions.

"When designing windbreaks for minimizing cold stress in feedlot facilities, a straight-line, east-west orientation on the north versus the traditional L-shape may be more beneficial, particularly if the rows of trees extend a couple of hundred feet past the west side of the feedlot," said Mader. "Windbreaks of this design should allow for adequate north and northwest winter wind protection. They would also eliminate dead air spaces, often associated with L-shaped windbreaks, which can be detrimental in the summer months."

Since management practices, protection needs and windbreak designs will vary among cattle enterprises, the design mentioned above probably is not applicable to cow-calf facilities and may or may not be applicable in cow-calf dry-lot situations, said Mader.

Suggestions for protection

Series accosts pork quality

A series of meetings has been scheduled for five Nebraska sites to train and certify port producers in Level III of the Pork Quality Assurance Program, said Dr. Barbara Straw, University of Nebraska-Lincoln swine veterinarian.

Straw said the program is designed to educate producers in the correct use and withdrawal procedures of drugs, both to maintain foreign markets for U. S. pork and strengthen domestic consumer confidence.

"The excuse of drug residues has been used in the past by importing nations when they want to embargo U.S. pork for political reasons," Straw said. "Meanwhile here at home, there is increasing consumer awareness of food health and safety issues."

The programs are open to all pork producers, veterinarians and others involved in the pork industry.

Attendance at the dinner meetings is free. However, space is limited and preregistration is required.

After a meal provided by the program sponsors, the meetings will feature presentations of the Pork Quality Assurance Program by UNL swine specialists, and small-group discussion and work sessions.

Meetings will start at 6:30 p.m. The schedule, with Cooperative Extension contact person, is:

June 25, Laurel City Auditorium, Mike Lechner, 402/254-6821.

July 9, West Point City Auditorium, Larry Howard, 402/3725356.

In addition to University of Nebraska-Cooperative Extension, meeting sponsors are the Nebraska Pork Producers Association, Elanco Animal Health, Solvay Animal Health, Smith-Kline Beecham, Pfizer, Merck, A.L. Labs, Hoechst-Roussel, Schering and Upjohn.

Soybean board plans meeting in Norfolk

The Nebraska Soybean Development, Utilization and Marketing Board (NSDU&MB) will meet Thursday, June 11, at Prenger's in Norfolk. The meeting is open to the public and will begin at 9 a.m.

Board member Cecilia Grevson of Madison said she was happy to see the June board meeting located outside of Lincoln. "I'm excited about holding this meeting in Norfolk," said Grevson. "This is a busy time of year and having the board meet in northeast Nebraska will allow more farmers to attend and provide input."

The June board meeting is when the budget for the coming fiscal year is finalized. The new fiscal year, FY93, begins July 1. Research grants were made in early spring so University personnel could get to work planting test plots and doing other seasonal research. The remaining budget categories - consumer information and promotion, producer information, and industry information - will be considered one last time at the June meeting.

Jim Weyer, managing director of the Nebraska Soybean Program, agreed it is important to get outside the capitol city to be more accessible to producers.

"This is a farmer board that invests farmer dollars from the new nationwide soybean checkoff known as SPARC," said Weyer. "We have a lot of new developments in soybean promotion and research, thanks to the national checkoff, and we want to be available to as many farmers as possible to get their feedback on these projects."

Among important new projects are two very promising uses for soybeans: cancer prevention and soy diesel fuel. Preliminary projects have been completed this fiscal year and Weyer hopes to see more action taken in FY93.

Also this spring, the Nebraska Soybean Board approved the purchase of a pickup to run on soy diesel. The pickup will be used for demonstrations across the state. It will run with no engine modifications using either 100-percent soy diesel fuel or a blend of petroleum diesel and environmentally friendly soy diesel.

FmHA loans still available

James L. Howe, Nebraska FmHA state director, announced that farm loans designed to help members of socially disadvantaged groups acquire land for farming, are still available through the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). Socially disadvantaged groups include Hispanics, Native Americans, African Americans, Asians and Pacific Islanders.

Under the program, FmHA will work with persons in those categories who are farming or did farm and qualify for an FmHA farm ownership loan to purchase land on the open market. FmHA can also provide other types of loans and technical assistance, if needed, to help the socially disadvantaged farmer.

Persons who are currently farming or who have experience in farming should contact the FmHA county office in their area to find out if they qualify.

CPO sparks talks

This may be a controversial subject that gets its fair share of discussion at the coffee shop, fertilizer/chemical store, or any place farming is discussed. However, it is soon to be another fact of life. Another one of those "they do this just to make my life miserable" subjects concerning "government" regulations.

What in the world is she talking about? Your Highly Erodible Land (HEL) Conservation Compliance Plan (also known as a CPO). Some refer to it as their worst nightmare, others to it as a real inconvenience, and some to it as the start of our land's salvation. No matter how it's referred to, it will soon be a total requirement for farmers with HEL.

To be eligible for USDA benefits, all farm program participants must comply with highly erodible land conservation provisions. These provisions require all producers to have a Soil Conservation Service (SCS) approved CPO before planting an agricultural crop on highly erodible land.

Producers who farm HEL without an approved CPO or without an acceptable conservation system, will be ineligible for all USDA benefits on ANY land they own, operate or have an interest in as a producer. These producers must work with SCS in developing a plan and fully applying the CPO before they can become eligible for program benefits.

Terri's Tidbits

By Terri Post

There may be some misconceptions on the practices that are acceptable for a CPO. Many times a minor change in the way a field is farmed can be all that is involved. Compliance doesn't mean large amounts of money spent on terraces, waterways, etc. Beginning January 1, 1995, all conservation systems must be fully implemented on HEL for a producer to earn program benefits. There are some cases where an exemption can apply but there must be extenuating circumstances involved.

Under the conservation provisions, producers who plant agricultural commodities on HEL have three options: (1) develop and apply an approved CPO that will reduce excessive erosion on the land and remain eligible for USDA benefits; (2) enroll their HEL in the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP); (3) produce agricultural commodities on HEL without an approved CPO and lose eligibility for ALL USDA program benefits.

The conservation provisions apply to all HEL in annual crop production and will be enforced due according to regulations. All producers must be actively applying 40 to 45 percent of their required practices in the plan for 1992. Producers who have not fully applied their conservation systems as of January 1, 1995, will remain ineligible for ALL USDA program participation until SCS certifies that the conservation system is fully implemented.
