Chautauqua comes to town

By Les Mann
Herald Publisher

The big tent went up Thursday night in Wayne in record time thanks to greater community participation than the Chautauqua troupe has ever seen.

The Chautauqua presentations began Friday, but the real show began Thursday with the tent raising and the official ceremony welcoming the Chautauquans.

Approximately 200 people pitched in, stood and watched, offered advice and took pictures during the raising of the big tent under which some of the greatest characters in American literature are being brought to life by collegiate scholars who have meticulously studied the lives, the works and even the mannerisms of the original authors.

"Wayne has been well prepared," said George Frein, who is the leader of the Chautauquans. He will be portraying Herman Melville of "Moby Dick" and "Billy Budd" fame.

Frein said the group was impressed with the opening ceremony, the turnout of workers and the preparation that has gone into bringing Chautauqua to Wayne. He said he was even more impressed since it has been less than a week since the town's major annual celebration, The Chicken Show.

"We will undoubtedly appeal to a different audience," said Frein but he warned his potential audience not to attend the show expecting to be bored.

"We are not stuffy," he said. "They will be surprised how lively it will be." He added attendees will not only be entertained by the dialog and antics of the characters, "they will be educated as well."

"We don't play for applause, we play for questions," he said. His character, Melville, will appear on the Chautauqua stage in Wayne for the first time with Frederick Douglass as portrayed by Charles Everett Pace. Their banter should be interesting, he said.

Frein, who is a professor of religious studies at the University of North Dakota and who has been a Chautauquan for several years, explained that while the scholars portray the same characters at each stop on their summer tour, each night they appear on stage, the presentation is different.

No one can ever say they have seen the same show before nor will they see the same show again. With the scholars changing their presentations at each stop it helps keep them fresh, more spontaneous and on their toes, said Frein.

The tent that was erected for the Wayne Chautauqua is larger than that put up at any of the other stops on their circuit this summer. The group came to Wayne from Sidney, Neb. where their show was well received last week according to Jane Renner Hood, executive director of the Nebraska Humanities Council, which underwrites the Chautauqua. The troupe prepared for bigger crowds in Wayne than it has at any of the other shows this summer.

Thursday's opening ceremony was preceded by an ice cream social and brass quintet concert at the 4-H building at the fairgrounds. During the ceremony, Mayor Bob Carhart welcomed the troupe and accepted a state proclamation honoring Wayne for hosting the Chautauqua. The proclamation was presented by state Sen. Gerald Conway.

The mayor said he accepted the state's well wishes on behalf of the Chautauqua committee which he said worked long and hard to bring the event to Wayne.

The schedule for the remaining Chautauqua events is inside today's Herald.

Grant funds help Wayne

First National Bank of Omaha has awarded a $2,500 grant to the Nebraska Humanities Council to help support the Great Plains Chautauqua taking place in Wayne from July 16 to July 21.

According to Executive Director Jane Renner Hood, First National Bank's support will help the Nebraska Humanities Council meet its financial obligation to the Great Plains Chautauqua for bringing the American Renaissance Chautauqua to Nebraska.

"The Chautauqua has just finished its successful western Nebraska run in Sidney, and I know that Nebraskans in the eastern part of the state are going to enjoy it just as much. We are deeply appreciative of First National's support for Chautauqua in Wayne."

The Wayne Chautauqua will feature nightly tent performances of the American Renaissance writers including Walt Whitman, Henry David Thoreau, Herman Melville and Louisa May Alcott, beginning at 7 p.m. at the fairgrounds.

Workshops and other programs for children and adults are scheduled every day at the fairgrounds, the Public Library, Wayne State College and Bressler Park.

According to Hood, a special Wayne feature will be the Sunday 10 a.m. Methodist Church service where Purdue University scholar Charles Pace will give a sermon as nineteenth-century abolitionist Frederick Douglass in the manner that Douglass often preached.

For additional information contact the Wayne Chamber of Commerce, 375-2240, or the Wayne Public Library, 375-3135.

Lifeline program at Providence offers peace of mind, reassurance

By LaVon Anderson
News Editor

Lifeline — Security. Security — Lifeline.

For many residents of Wayne and the surrounding area, the words Lifeline and security are completely interchangeable.

"My son lives in Kansas and my daughter lives in South Dakota," says Wayne resident Ivadell Olson, "and they're the main reason I hooked up to Lifeline about three years ago."

Although there was no particular incident which convinced Ivadell to become a Lifeline subscriber, she says it did make her children feel better to know that their mother is only a push button away from receiving help.

"Security," echoes Sharyl Luedtke, who helps install the Lifeline equipment for Providence Medical Center. "That's probably the main reason people come to us."

As in Ivadell's case, Sharyl adds that it's often the children who contact the hospital because they want their parents to remain independent, but they also want the peace of mind in knowing that help is close at hand if and when it is needed.

THE LIFELINE program at Providence Medical Center in Wayne began in 1982 and has more than doubled since that time — from 25 Lifeline transmitters in 1982 to 63 transmitters in 1992.

"We were the second hospital in Nebraska to implement the program," points out Sister Monica, who is in charge of the Lifeline at Providence Medical Center. "Now, the program is much more common across the state."

In the event that help is needed, Lifeline users simply push a button on a small device which may be worn around the neck on a chain or attached to a strap at the waist.

Whenever help is needed, 24

hours a day, the push of the button immediately activates the home unit, which is attached to the telephone, and automatically dials the emergency response center at the hospital.

Luedtke points out that Lifeline works even if the phone is off the hook, or during a power failure, and that the signal can be received from a distance as far as 300 feet.

"ONCE THE button is pushed," explains Luedtke, "the hospital immediately calls the person requesting assistance. If no one answers, we contact one of three responders the Lifeline user has designated in the event of an emergency."

Once the designated responder loicates the Lifeline user, he or she pushes a button which again rings the hospital and signifies that the person calling for help has been located.

"We call back at that point to see if the situation is under control and if more help or an ambulance is needed," says Sharyl. "We take it from there."

In the event that none of the designated responders are available, Sharyl said the hospital contacts the police department and they respond to the call for assistance.

SHARYL points out that voice Lifelines also are available and allow the hospital to talk directly to the patient from a box attached to the telephone.

Although Ivadell has been a Lifeline subscriber for three years, it wasn't until three months ago, after taking a fall in her home, that she actually used the device and experienced it's reassurance first-hand.

"I had been to Norfolk with a friend, and when I walked in the door I must have tripped over the rug," recalls Ivadell. "I thought I would just get up, but I soon discovered that I couldn't."

Ivadell, who had left her Lifeline on the kitchen table, said she slid over to the table and immediately pushed the button.

Because she has a voice Lifeline, Ivadell was able to talk to hospital personnel directly and explain what

SS manager reminds self-employed of their responsibilities

By Thomas O'Connor

Social Security Manager, Norfolk
Self-employed individuals have special responsibilities with regard to their Social Security coverage. For example, the self-employed pay a Social Security tax equal to the combined rate paid by employees and employers.

This year the Social Security tax rate for the self-employed is 15.3 percent on earnings up to $55,500. Another 2.9 percent on earnings up to $130,200 pays for Medicare coverage.

If you start a business and have net earnings of more than $400 in self-employment, you must file a federal income tax return and pay any federal taxes due -- and the Social Security tax. The tax is reported on Schedule C (Profit and Loss From Business or Profession) or, where appropriate, Schedule F (Farm Income and Expenses) and Schedule SE (Computation of Social Security Self-Employment Tax.)

If you have both wages and self-employment income, you should first figure the amount of wages on which you have paid Social Security taxes and then add your self-employment earnings up to the limits I mentioned earlier. If your wages alone exceed these limits, you do not pay Social Security taxes on the additional income earned in self-employment.

Anyone who wants more information about Social Security and self-employment can call our office. Our number is (402) 371-1595.

During press conference

Chautauqua scholars discuss lives, ideology

By LaVon Anderson
News Editor

"People spend all their time reading newspapers and magazines. They don't have time for substantial material."

"Literature has a great future, if only people would put down those newspapers and magazines and pick up a book."

Those words by Herman Melville, portrayed by George Frein, generated both laughter and food for thought during a press conference Friday morning to kick off The American Renaissance Chautauqua in Wayne.

The press conference provided the general public, as well as the news media, an opportunity to meet and ask questions of the seven Chautauqua authors taking part in the five-day event, July 17-21.

Joining Melville during the press conference and in character were Nathaniel Hawthorne (Douglas Watson), Frederick Douglass (Charles Everett Pace), Walt Whitman (Carrol Peterson), Louisa May Alcott (Anne Bail Howard), Margaret Fuller (Laurie James) and Henry David Thoreau (Kevin Radaker).

MELVILLE opened the press conference by explaining that the American Renaissance period began in 1835 and represents a romantic period of literature.

When asked how the authors were treated by the popular press during the years of the American Renaissance, Whitman replied that the reviews he wrote himself of "Leaves of Grass" were very favorable.

"Most of the others were not," added Whitman. "I thought it necessary to set them right and that's why I wrote my own review."

Douglass pointed out that he was extensively covered in the press when he opened his own newspaper in 1847.

"Those who feed on this material (newspapers) are like old women gossiping over their tea," added Thoreau to the delight of the audience.

In adding his two cents, Hawthorne said the newspapers were frequent to run his stories, but less frequent in payment.

"I published in the popular press and it was very good to me," chimed in Alcott, while Margaret Fuller pointed out that she was the first woman journalist to work on the New York Tribune. "My articles were excellent."

THE SEVEN Chautauqua characters continued to captivate press conference goers for nearly an hour and a half while fielding a variety of questions.

Regarding the treatment of female authors during the years of the American Renaissance, Fuller replied that Edgar Allan Poe once said humanity could be divided into three classes — men, women and Margaret Fuller.

Thoreau explained that he went to Walden Pond to live simply and deliberately. "To maintain oneself on this earth is not a hardship, but a pastime, if we live simply and wisely," said Thoreau.

Douglass revealed that writing for him has always been a struggle. "I basically consider myself an orator," said the abolitionist and statesman.

When asked for his impression of Wayne, Whitman replied that he had not been in the community sufficiently.

"However," added the poet, "I believe my books are available here and they are not always available in those New England communities."

Child labor laws apply to farm, ranch firms

Although farm and ranch firms have not been listed among the state's businesses that recently have violated the Federal Child Labor Laws, agricultural firms are subject to the laws, according to a farm management specialist at the University of Nebraska Southeast Research and Extension Center.

Ray Massey said child labor laws are included in the Fair Labor Standards Act that was passed in 1938 and revised periodically. The laws cover such things as what minors can and cannot do, conditions surrounding their employment and guidelines for employers hiring minors.

Agricultural employers are subject to special provisions regarding age, working hours and hazardous jobs. Children who are employed by their parents are not subject to child labor laws regardless of age or job hazard. But child labor laws apply if the farm is a corporation that has non-parent owners even if the owners are aunts and uncles or grandparents, Massey said.

Any minor 16 years of age or older can perform any job in agriculture any time. Children 15 years old and younger can work outside of school hours in nonhazardous jobs. The time restriction varies from place to place. Basically minors can work any time during summer vacation, he said. During the school year, they can only work before or after school, on weekends or on non-school days.

This point of the law is especially critical because it is the section many businesses violate.

Children 12 and 13 years of age can work in agriculture only if their parents also are employed on the same farm, Massey said. Children under 12 years old can be hired only if the employer is exempted from the federal minimum wage provisions. Most small- to medium-sized farms can hire a child under 12 years of age if one of the child's parents also is employed.

There are many hazardous jobs that may keep minors from being employed on a farm or ranch, Massey said. These include operating or working tractors with more than a 20 PTO horsepower engine, and working with or operating corn pickers, combines, hay mowers, hay balers, feed grinders, crop dryers, forage blowers, augers, conveyers, post hole diggers and trenchers or earth moving equipment. Some other hazards are bulls, boars or studs that are maintained for breeding purposes, sows with suckling pigs or cows with newborn calves. Minors also are not supposed to work from a ladder or scaffold more than 20 feet high, handle or apply agricultural chemicals identified by the word "poison" or "warning" or the skull and crossbones illustration or work around anhydrous ammonia.

Persons 14 or 15 years of age who want to work in agriculture should contact the local extension agent or vocational agriculture teacher to enroll in training programs on operating farm machinery. Minors who have certificates indicating that they have successfully completed 4-H or vocational agriculture tractor or machine operation training programs can work at the jobs for which they are trained.

Agricultural employers should ask for a copy of the tractor or machine operation program certificate of completion. They also need proof of age from anyone they employ and written consent from a parent of any minor under 14 years of age, the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources specialist said.

For more information about child labor, employers should get a copy of the NebGuide, G1002, "Child Labor Laws for Agriculture," from the local Cooperative Extension office. It includes responsibilities of the employer and lists government agencies that can be contacted for further clarification of employment practices.

had happened. Within minutes, a responder was on his way.

"I was shook up and I hurt all over," says Ivadell, "but thankfully I didn't need to be hospitalized."

"My children were real happy to think that I had the sense of mind to use the Lifeline."

DURING THE past year, Providence Medical Center has received 25 Lifeline calls for assistance.

"If somebody wants the extra reassurance that a Lifeline provides, all he or she has to do is call the hospital," says Sharyl, adding that the program is available to persons of all ages.

"All that's required of the person requesting the service is a modular phone outlet and a list of three designated responders."

The Lifeline program at Providence Medical Center is available within a 25-mile radius of Wayne, at a cost of $15 a month for a non-voice unit and $17.50 a month for a voice unit.

"A lot of children get Lifeline for their parents as a Christmas or birthday gift," says Sharyl.

"All the person has to do is remember to push the button. We're here to do the rest."

Nebraska farmers believe

Fewer chemicals mean cleaner groundwater

By Robert Fraass
IANR News Assistant

Most Nebraska farmers who responded to a survey believe groundwater contamination by agricultural chemicals can be reduced by reducing the amount of chemicals applied to crops, according to a University of Nebraska-Lincoln study.

Fifty-eight percent of a random sample survey of 517 farmers and ranchers indicated that reducing the amount of pesticides and nitrogen applied to crops will reduce groundwater contamination. Sixty-six percent indicated that adjusting fertilizer rates based on regular soil tests will reduce contamination.

Larry Schulze, study co-author and UNL pesticide coordinator, said the UNL Cooperative Extension study conducted in 1989 suggested that programs could educate younger farmers and larger farm operators about soil characteristics, pesticide dissipation and nitrate leaching.

Such programs can address the risk factors at the heart of groundwater contamination concerns and the effectiveness of specific prevention and control strategies, the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources specialist said.

The highest percentage of farmers surveyed (68 percent) cited water tables located within 15 feet of the ground surface as the greatest risk for groundwater contamination by agricultural chemicals.

Other chief factors given by farmers were back-siphoning into wells (64 percent), pesticide spills (58 percent), poor disposal of left-over chemicals (56 percent), chemical application on sandy soils low in organic matter (54 percent), and water run-off (51 percent).

Most farmers surveyed said pesticide application methods pose few risks to groundwater, Schulze said. Broadcast applications were considered low to moderate risks by most farmers while banded applications were considered low or very low risks, he said.

Opinions were mixed about risks associated with chemicals leaching through the soil, Schulze said.

Soybean testing featured

What's the goal of every soybean farmer? Lower input costs and higher yields! For a second year, the Nebraska Soybean Board has funded a project that puts research to work on the farm finding ways to improve profitability in soybean production.

A pilot tour will be held on the farm of Dave Fuoss, Wayne, today (Monday). The tour will begin at 6:30 p.m. and will focus on no-till drilled soybeans and a test of full rate versus half rate herbicide applications.

The Fuoss farm is located five miles south and 1 mile west of Laurel.

The On-Farm Demonstration Project is a "research" effort funded by soybean producers through their investment in the nationwide soybean checkoff. This project takes University research which is also funded by checkoff dollars, and applies it directly to large-scale, "real" farming operations. Twenty acres have been cash rented from eight farmers across the state. The farmer-cooperators are paid custom rates for their field operations. Most of the inputs of seed and chemicals are donated by agribusiness. After harvest, the soybeans will be marketed according to the finds of another checkoff funded research project at UNL which studied the seasonal trends in marketing.

Victor Bohuslavsky, Director of Industry Information for the Nebraska Soybean Program, works with each farmer-cooperator to set up a customized test based on new methods they would like to try. He says the on-farm project allows farmers to take a look at what research can be applied to their operation without involving any risk.

"By cash renting the ground and getting paid for their field work, these farmers can experiment with different soybean production techniques without the worry of success or failure. Farmers in the area can see how the research actually works in their region," said Bohuslavsky.

"This project helps bridge the gap between the research lab and the soybean field. You can read about experimental results in a farm magazine, but there's no substitute for seeing something under actual farming conditions," he said. "A farmer can also see the results of his investment in SPARC, the nationwide soybean checkoff, first hand."

The other farmer-cooperators and their projects are: Robert Luenighorner, Pilger, no-till soybeans and comparison of two herbicides; Stewart Monson, Craig, no-till soybeans in a drilled versus rows test; Ed Neesen, Schuyler, no-till drilled soybeans, population study; Norman Krug, Chapman, ridge-till soybean population study; Orell Piening, Malcolm, drilled soybean population study; Ron Sladky, Wahoo, soybean population and post herbicide comparisons; and Bob Rikli, Murdock, a soybean variety test plot.

July interesting month weather-wise

Weather-wise July is a very interesting month. We have experienced below normal temperatures, normal rainfall and above normal humidity. People may complain some about the humidity, but we do adjust quite easily to the conditions. Plants, however, may suffer some irreparable damage. The corn and bean crops are about eight to 10 days behind average for the date. Hopefully, the high humidity and warm nights will help it catch up. We have seen very few problems in corn. First generation corn borers have passed, root worm larvae are almost fully developed and will quit feeding in another week. Over all field crops are very good in this area. I even expect the best oats crop we've had in five years!

Horticultural crops, however, are suffering from the humid cool nights. We have had calls about mildew and leaf blight outbreaks in smaller fruits like grapes and garden crops. Tomatoes are the most susceptible. Most fruits can be dusted with a lime sulfur dust that restricts mildew growth.

Tomatoes are the most sensitive plants when it comes to moisture and temperature stress.

BLOSSOM DROP is common, but rarely persists through the season. Blossom drop is caused by: 1) low temperatures in the spring, usually below 60 degrees F, 2) high temperatures in the summer, above 80 degrees F, or 3) excessive nitrogen fertilization. Spring blossom drop may be prevented in some cases with a fruit set hormone. The easiest solution is to wait for later flowers to set fruit. Row covers can be used to encourage earlier fruit set by increasing temperatures around the plant.

FRUIT CRACKING is common in home gardens. Heavy moisture following dry periods may cause fruit cracking. Some varieties crack more easily than others. To minimize the cracking during stress periods, pick fruits in the pink stage and let them ripen indoors, otherwise pick fully ripe fruit.

LEAF CURL commonly occurs in hot weather or after cultivation. Keep the plants adequately watered. Deep cultivation around the plants can damage roots and cause wilting. Some varieties have leaves that curl naturally, even when not under moisture stress.

BLOSSOM-END ROT of tomatoes results from an irregular or insufficient supply of moisture and/or not enough calcium in the fruit. The tops of tomato fruits, especially the first fruits to ripen, become water-soaked, turn light brown in color and become sunken as the fruits enlarge and begin to ripen. To reduce this condition: 1) mulch to maintain uniform soil moisture, 2) do not cultivate deeply around the plant, and 3) avoid using high-nitrogen fertilizer. Parasitic disease organisms are not responsible for blossom-end rot, so fungicides are of no value in its control.

I would like to make special note of the upcoming Chautauqua, July 16-21 on the Wayne County Fairgrounds. Chautauqua is a very entertaining and educational program. You will witness actor historians re-enact and portray famous characters of American History. The character names may not be very familiar to you, but don't let that stop you. The program will be full of information and humor. This will be a special opportunity to experience a grand theatrical event in your own home town. See you there!

Nebraska Soybean Association wants tax repealed

The Nebraska Soybean Association has taken a strong stand against the current tax applied to fertilizers. In action at a recent meeting of the Board of Directors for the Association, a resolution was adopted calling for the immediate and complete repeal of the tax.

NSA president Tom Groetcke, Primrose, said he felt the Association needed to speak out about the tax because of the potential ill effects on consumer prices for food, the environment and the state's economy.

The Association Directors cited the disincentives of the tax as they apply to sound environmental operations. The way the law is written, farmers are discouraged from purchasing fertilizers that lend themselves to best management practices.

"Farmers are more aware of their environment than anyone else," explained Groetcke. "so we felt it was important to point out the fertilizer tax law discourages producers from buying low analysis fertilizers such as urea and nitrogen solutions as opposed to anhydrous ammonia."

He went on the add that raising the cost of production while lowering yields was bad for both farmers and consumers.

"The fertilizer tax does nothing to improve the agricultural economy in Nebraska," said Groetcke. "The goal of the tax was to generate revenue, but when a tax is detrimental to an industry, like this fertilizer tax is to agriculture, it ultimately undermines the tax base. That's not a very productive tax policy."

The Association is encouraging all members to call their state senators and ask for the repeal of this fertilizer tax.

"The fertilizer tax is a regressive tax on the ag economy and detrimental to the environment," continued Groetcke. "We feel it is bad tax policy to single out an industry and add to the cost of production, which will ultimately raise the cost of food to the consumer."

Replanting may be option following hail

Almost a foot of hail received in areas of the western Panhandle over the weekend left sugar beets exposed to the roots and wheat mowed, according to David Baltensperger, crop breeding specialist at the University of Nebraska Panhandle Research and Extension Center.

The hail comes after western producers have experienced weeks of drought.

"However poor producers thought their crops were before, they were still crops," Baltensperger said at the Agricultural Climate Situation Committee meeting on Monday (July 13).

Now-replanting is the only option for many producers, but corn herbicide restrictions limit the options.

Bob Klein, cropping system specialist at the University of Nebraska West Central Research and Extension Center said the producers should plant cover crops to lessen weed problems next year. Forage sorghum and oats were two suggestions for replanting, but care should be exercised based on previous herbicide use. For questions, contact local county extension agents.

Most areas of Nebraska received above average precipitation last week, Al Weiss, UNL ag meteorologist said.

On a statewide basis last week the state received about 200 percent of the precipitation it normally does.

Wheat harvests across the state are being slowed by the rainfall.

The rainfall and cool, moderate temperatures have caused about every leaf spot disease possible to appear on soybean, corn and alfalfa crops, said Dave Wysong, UNL plant pathologist.

Spring blackstem is causing defoliation in alfalfa and may result in lighter than normal yields. Bacterial blight is coming on quickly, and Wysong said he is mainly concerned about corn.

Producers should also watch for problems with leaf rust, yellow leaf blight and corn smut. The smut is present at the base of the plants near the soil line, which is highly unusual, he said.

Another uncommon problem is a non-infectious condition in which the internodes of the corn do not elongate. The plants look good, but their growth is stunted, Wysong said. The condition seems to be concentrated in a three county area around York County. It affects two or three plants in 100, and the cause of the problem is unknown.

Steve Danielson, field crop entomologist, said the cool temperatures seem to be slowing insect development and related problems.

Potato leafhoppers are still a concern of alfalfa producers, he said, and many producers are second cutting their fields to end the problem. These pests also are causing chlorosis of soybean leaves.

Producers should begin checking the upper side of corn plants for egg masses of western bean cutworms.

Corn rootworms also are causing problems for corn producers who applied insecticides in the early spring, Danielson said, but it is too late to treat them effectively.

PigCHAMP workshop at Norfolk July 28-29

Northeast Community College will host a PigCHAMP hands-on workshop Tuesday and Wednesday, July 28-29 in the College's Agriculture/Allied Health Building.

PigCHAMP is a new computer software program to help swine producers efficiently manage their swine herd.

The workshop will consist of two levels. Level I will emphasize data input and report generation, and will include managing sow/born and grow/finish input, avoiding common errors, using PigCHAMP reports to make farm management easier, and selecting and using reports to address specific problems.

Lunch was served by the Bethune family. Holly gave a demonstration on her trip to Washington, D.C., and Erin gave a demonstration on a felt needle book.

The next meeting is today (Monday) at 2 p.m. in the Carroll auditorium.

Carol Longe, news reporter.

There is no prerequisite for this level.

Level II emphasizes advanced report generation and report interpretation. Level I or one year of PigCHAMP experience is required. Items to be covered in level two include batch data entry, generating custom reports, using macros, and interpreting diagnostic reports.

Cost of the workshop is $80 per individual, or $65 for each additional participant from the same business.

For more information concerning registration procedures contact Wayne Erickson at Northeast, 644-0586, or 1-800-348-9033.

Youngsters 'dive' into summer reading

The theme for the 1992 summer reading program was "Dive Into-A Good Book." This theme was used throughout the state of Nebraska as an effort to encourage children's reading.

The summer reading program ran from June 9 to July 12. Local children, ages 4 to 12, had an opportunity to explore the wonderful world of water in oceans, seas and rivers as well as their fabulous inhabitants through independent reading, story-times, films, special programs, crafts and games.

A special visit of the Zoomobile from the Henry Doorley Zoo, celebrity readers and a pool party are a few of the many special activities that the children participated in.

The Zoomobile opened the summer reading program by bringing turtles, snakes, snails and many other animals for the children to look at and touch. The pool party last Sunday brought an end to the summer reading program where the kids played swimming games and received awards and snacks.

A total of 550 books were read throughout the five week program. The students in first-sixth grades signed a contract with the library as to how many books they could read in a five week period. Prizes were awarded to first and second place winners in each grade.

The winners of the summer reading program are:

First grade — first place: Tiffany Frerichs, 21 books and second place:

Volunteers needed

Forestry committees being formed

Tree lovers and concerned community volunteers are needed to participate on one of five district forestry committees being formed across the state by the Nebraska Forest Service (NFS).

Kris Irwin, NFS assistant community forester at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, said the committees will identify concerns, discuss issues and develop activities to improve tree resources in their districts.

Nebraska is now served by five district foresters, whom the forestry committees will assist in delivering the state's community forestry program.

One example of an issue that committees would examine is the state's dead tree problem.

Environmental conditions over the past few years have killed hundreds of trees, especially in the Panhandle, and many of Nebraska's trees are still stressed, Irwin said. Committees would discuss the severity of the problem in communities around the district and form solutions.

Nebraska agribusiness firms need change to better serve customers

Owners of Nebraska agribusiness firms may need to install new business practices such as pricing equitably and volume discounts to serve the changing needs of producers, said a University of Nebraska-Lincoln marketing specialist.

Mike Turner said business owners that price equitably base the price of a product or service on the cost of meeting the need. This sometimes is controversial with smaller producers, but the needs of ranchers and farmers have changed over the past 15 years, and business owners must change along with them.

An increase of approximately $25,000 in yearly living expenses for Nebraska's farmers since 1975 has driven many producers to increase size, production and efficiency and, in the process, they have outgrown hometown agribusinesses, Turner said.

For instance, a producer needed 3,400 acres of wheat to meet living expenses in 1990, whereas he needed 500 acres in 1975. Soybean producers needed 950 acres in 1990 to Nail Techniques has joined forces with LaSalon Family Hair Care, located at Third and Main St., in Hoskins. Owner and nail technician is Deborah Ritze.

In addition to basic nail care, Mrs. Ritze specializes in sculptured nails, French and luxury manicures, as well as pedicures.

"I carry a complete line of Matrix colors and odorless Turbo sculptured nails," says Deborah. "I also have stones and gold charms, as well as fun seasonal and holiday decals available."

DEBORAH opened her business in June after receiving a certificate in sculptured nails from a Sioux City seminar she attended. She also had previous experience in nail care while employed in Colorado and Tennessee.

She is available at LaSalon in Hoskins on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, by appointment only, and at LaSalon II in Winside on Wednesdays. She can be reached at 565-4488 or 286-4701.
