Fair is coming!

County getting ready to show pride in agriculture

By Les Mann
Herald Publisher

Wayne County rural and urban residents alike are about ready to celebrate the area's rich agricultural heritage when the 70th anniversary of the Wayne County Fair kicks off Thursday.

The pace of activity is approaching frantic as last minute projects and preparation is undertaken for the historic fair which will run through Sunday.

Many unique events are being added to the fair this year to commemorate the 70th year of the fair and the state's 125th Anniversary.

A fair parade will be held Saturday morning at 10 a.m. and will feature more than 50 antique tractors, a king and queen of the fair, the world famous White Horse Patrol and grand marshal Lyle Seymour.

The parade will move north on Main Street from first street and will turn west on tenth.

Volunteer workers are crawling all over the Wayne county Agricultural Park in these days prior to the fair putting finishing touches on new projects including restrooms in the commercial building, road maintenance, lights, screened porches and general maintenance.

"I just can't understand why people want to come out and do all this hard work," said Leland Herman. He added that he and other ag society members, who themselves have been spending many hours at the Ag Park, certainly do appreciate the help of all the volunteers.

More than 3,000 people are expected for the free barbecue Friday at 6 p.m. The barbecue is followed by the presentation of the 100 year Farm Family awards and the Ark Valley Boys stage show at the grandstand.

Sooner Amusements will be setting up its carnival booths and thrill rides on Wednesday and will be open for business Thursday night with wrist band night, allowing those who purchase wristbands unlimited riding privileges.

The wrist band special will also be in effect Saturday from 1 to 5 p.m.

Admission to all fair activities, including the stage shows, is available.

New name for fairgrounds

Formerly called the Fairgrounds, the name of the location of the fair has been changed to more accurately reflect the role of the facilities in the community, said Leland Herman, agricultural society member.

It is now technically, the Wayne County Agricultural Park.

There's more to celebrate than just a name change, as well, according to Mick Topp, another ag society board member. This year the board purchased 10 acres of additional land next to the ag park to be used for future expansion. Some members of the board are pushing the addition as a prime location for the proposed new community center in Wayne.

Sharing a golden moment

Crissy Ahmann Leighton, niece of Wayne radio station manager Mark Ahmann, completed her swimming events at the 25th Olympic Games in Barcelona with two golds and one silver medal.

Ahmann-Leighton received the silver medal after placing runner-up in the 100 meter butterfly. She captured the gold in the 4x100 meter medley relay which broke the world record, and she struck gold in the 4x100 freestyle relay.

"It was a great trip for not only her but for all of us," Ahmann said. "Just as an uncle, it was a great feeling watching Crissy succeed. The Olympics are great but when you have someone as close to you as a niece, swimming for the whole country it is indescrible." Ahmann said it's more than likely that what he and his wife Jane have witnessed on television the past few days is a once in a lifetime thrill. "I'll probably never see anything like this again," Ahmann said. "I'm proud of the way Crissy handled herself. Her and her parents have sacrificed a lot and they were rewarded."

Jane and I would also like to thank everyone in this community who have stopped us on the street and called us in show of their support of our niece in the Olympics."

Senate takes up tax, district issues

More than 15 bills were introduced in the first day of the special session of the Nebraska Legislature, most of them to try to deal with redistricting in Northeast Nebraska, according to State Sen. Gerald Conway of Wayne.

Conway told the Herald he thought the issue would be easier to deal with than most people think. He said the main question that has to be settled first is whether to take action now or wait.

That issue has created a split between Republicans, who currently hold the odd numbered districts among the four in Northeast Nebraska, and the Democrats who hold the even numbered districts.

It is the odd numbered districts which are likely to come up one short if the issue is settled now and the evens which will be one short if the redistricting issue is settled in one or two years.

"Let's do what is right," Conway said. He said he favors settling the issue now, since to wait, might cause the Supreme Court to do it for the legislature "under mandamus."

Conway, in a phone interview from Lincoln Friday, said the general mood of the senators, who were called into session to settle a couple of constitutional issues handed them by the state supreme court, is not exactly favorable to the court.

He said he was seated with

Speaker Dennis Baack Friday when a bill was introduced and the clerk asked to which legislative committee the new bill should be referred.

"Why don't we just reference them all straight to the Supreme Court," Baack reportedly grouched.

The other hot issue facing the solons is what to do about a potential $100 million shortfall caused by a Supreme Court order to refund personal property tax revenues.

Conway said he believes a delayed approach might be the best course on the tax question. He said research still needs to be done to determine the impact of the decision and exactly what effect it will have on the state budget.

He said these questions might more easily be answered this fall.

City passes 'tentative' budget

By Les Mann
Herald Publisher

Wayne City Council approved the city budget for the the 1993 fiscal year Tuesday but actions by the state legislature, which entered special session today, could make a big share of the budget moot.

Wayne City Administrator Joe Salitros echoed the sentiments of many other local officials who said they would be watching closely that actions of the senators who were called to Lincoln to deal in part with an anticipated $200 million shortfall in state revenue.

Approximately 40 percent of the Wayne city budget come from state grants and aid, said Salitros.

With the senators looking for massive amounts of state expenditures to cut, it is likely aid to local governments could feel some of the reductions, said Salitros.

If the state should reduce its aid to Wayne, Salitros told the Herald the city would be prepared. He said expenditures on capital outlay items generally come later in the budget year and they simply would not be incurred under a state reduction.

"I told our department heads to watch the special session closely, as we all will," said Salitros. He said he indicated to them that the bud-getted items may or may not be available.

The budget passed by the city during a "special resumption of Tuesday's meeting, called for total appropriations of $1.8 million next year and will require a local city property tax draw five percent greater than last year's tax request.

State law had required that the city budget be approved before August 1.

Who says lightning never strikes twice?

A house located six and one quarter miles south of Wakefield was struck by lightning twice, during Tuesday's electrical storm according to Wakefield city administrator Lowell Johnson.

The Erwin Bottger house was struck twice in a matter of minutes. The lightning caused a fire and the Wakefield Fire Department was called in around 11 p.m.

"The house was completely filled with smoke when we arrived,"

Johnson said. "We had to search for the fire and ended up tearing out a wall to get to it. The lightning evidently followed the plumbing into the kitchen in a cupboard in the wall under the sink."

Johnson said the fire department had the fire completely out in about 10 minutes but the time lapsed between arriving on the scene and tearing out the siding and sheathing took a total of 20 minutes. No injuries were reported.

Crops need heat

Cool, cloudy weather over the past few weeks has resulted in a lower than normal accumulation of growing degree days, and the six to 10 day forecast calls for more of the same, Al Weiss, University of Nebraska-Lincoln agricultural meteorologist, stated at the Agricultural Climate Situation Committee meeting Monday, (July 27).

Sorghum, soybeans and corn are behind, Weiss said, some crops as much as 12 days. The lag endangers crops to early frost unless growing degree days accumulate at a faster rate than previously. But the forecast from the National Weather Service for July 30 through Aug. 3, calls for much below normal temperatures for Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

Development of crops will be reduced further by these cool temperatures, Weiss said.

Al Dutcher, state climatologist, said experts attribute the cool temperatures to the eruption of Mount Pinatubo in the Philippines last year, and the below average temperatures are expected to continue through the next few months. Dutcher said he is receiving calls from many concerned insurance agents about the situation.

Don Sander, UNL agronomist, said if abnormally low temperatures continue many of the state's crops will not make it, especially corn, which has not even tasseled in some areas of the state.

Producers often associate adequate soil moisture with high yields, Sander said, but that will not be the case if Nebraska does not receive sufficient growing degree days.

Sander said there are about 60 days from tasseling to maturity. That puts the maturity date around Sept. 15 or 20 for tasseled corn.

Ron Seymour, integrated pest management assistant at the NU West Central Research and Extension Center at North Platte, said he expects some growers in his area to use their lagging crops for silage.

The excessive rain has left producers puzzling over nitrogen applications through center pivot systems.

Sander said nitrogen may be applied with small amounts of water. Applying nitrogen with 1/4 inch of water is fine, according to Sander. The question producers should ask themselves is if the application is worth it. If silking or tasseling corn is nitrogen deficient, producers can apply 30 pounds and perhaps 50 pounds of nitrogen. But, Sander cautioned, applying this will not increase yields unless a deficiency exists.

Richard Ferguson, soils specialist at the NU South Central Research and Extension Center in Clay Center, said some producers in his area will not harvest wheat because of heavy rains and excessive weed growth.

Producers will have to get rid of the weeds at some point, Ferguson said. Some options are waiting until the fields dry and then turning them under or burning them off.

Planner sees future for Wayne Co.

By Les Mann
 Herald Publisher

Rural and city residents of Wayne County share the same concerns for the future quality of life and experienced by all residents of Wayne County, according to professional planner Tim Keelan of Lincoln.

Keelan conducted a joint meeting of Wayne city and country planning task forces Thursday night at which he said he was pleased with the participation and frank discussion of issues affecting everyone in Northeast Nebraska.

"IT IS A joy to see the start of communication and discussion on the common issues and problems that face everyone," said Keelan. Environment and recycling issues, land use and zoning, recreational facilities, consolidation of government services, housing development, road improvement, all were issues discussed by the nearly 40 who attended the open meeting at the Ag Park commercial building.

"Wayne County is pretty sophisticated," said Keelan as he surveyed the residents who milled and visited after the meeting. He said he was impressed that more rural residents that urban attended the meeting and expressed genuine concerns about the future of the rural lifestyle.

KEELAN SAID Wayne County, with its 116 year history of settlement and development is far ahead of most European rural communities which have yet to address most of the problems Wayne Countians have already got a handle on.

Setting aside recreational and cultural facilities for the future, participating in regional focus on development, considering the economies of joint governmental services and enhancement of the environment are all efforts underway in Wayne County that will set it well on the way to a bright future, he said, he predicted a brighter future for Wayne Countians than that of residents of many other regions of the state and nation because of the involvement of resident here in planning for the future.

AS AN EXAMPLE, Keelan talked about the Community Center project being talked about in Wayne.

He said residents of Winside and Carroll and even Wakefield are interested in the development of a multi-use center in Wayne.

The county agriculture society has purchased land next to the fairgrounds and "is basically handing it over for development of the community center," he said.

"Wayne has been very resourceful in the use of its existing facilities," he said, adding it makes sense to look at the development of a community center in Wayne on a county-wide basis.

RESIDENTS WHO attended the meeting expressed support for developing the new facility without the large commitment of tax dollars.

"It doesn't have to be a big elaborate building," said Mick Topp, a member of the ag society board.

Wayne Chamber manager Curt Wilwerding said the facility could be funded predominantly by private and public grants and aid.

Keelan and others at the meeting urged residents of both the city and county to join the task force working to develop the community center. Lois Shelton, who chaired a study task force on the community center issue for the community is the contact person for participation with the effort, said Keelan.

Mrs. Shelton said there has been some sentiment expressed that the community center might not be as high a need now that a new private restaurant and banquet facility is being developed in the old Lumber Company facility. The opening is nearing on Riley's Pub on South Main.

However, she said the new development will not meet all the needs identified in the study of a potential multi-purpose center.

INDOOR recreational opportunities, a gathering place for youth, and a place for free or low cost small group gatherings are three of the needs that will not be fulfilled by the new restaurant she said.

The community center is still a need, she said.

While several other issues were also identified as needing consideration, Keelan adjourned the meeting about half way through a list of potential topics. Wednesday for the Friday edition. Our goal is to get the news in the hands of readers literally minutes after the last story is written by the news staff, said Mann.

The Wayne Herald has also signed a contract with Associated Press to provide access to wire service reports.

"Our goal is to remain predominantly a community newspaper," said Mann. "You'll still see mainly stories about local folks on our front and feature pages, but the wire service will give Wayne Herald readers a sample of stories from outside the area that have particular impact here," he said.

An example would be the current special legislative session, said Mann.

Local EMTs attend state conference

Winside residents William Anderson and Verneal Marotz and Wayne resident Miron Jenness attended the 13th annual Nebraska Statewide Emergency Medical Services (EMS) Conference July 17-19 in Kearney.

More than 750 individuals from 213 communities attended the event which was sponsored by Central Community College-Grand Island Campus, Emergency Nurses Association, EMT Coordinators Society, First Responders EMS, Nebraska EMT Association, Nebraska Health Department's EMS Division, Nebraska Rescue Emergency Care Association, Northeast Nebraska Economic Development District, University of Nebraska at Kearney and the Central Nebraska, High Plains, Midlands and Western EMS councils.

Participants earned continuing education hours and/or college credit by attending courses on accidents and crime scenes, alcoholic patients, burns, clandestine drug lab, trauma, decontamination, emergency vehicle operations, environmental emergencies, farm accidents, hazardous materials, infectious diseases, insect bites and water rescue and other topics.

—Individuals attending the conference work in their communities as first responders, emergency medical technicians, paramedics and in other areas of emergency medical services.

Wakefield street work weathered

Seventy blocks of city streets in Wakefield will soon sport a new armor coat, according to Fred Salmon, city council chairman.

He said the approximately $20,000 street improvement project will get underway "as soon as it quits raining". The town council awarded the contract earlier this year to STA-BILT of Harlan, Iowa.

Salmon said the council's August plans include advertising for bids to have both inside and outside surfaces of the city water tower repainted. Work is scheduled for completion this fall.

Other council members are Alfred Benson, Terry Baker and Terry Trube.

Drive was fulfilling

The Siouxland Blood Bank reports a successful blood drive was held on Thursday, July 23, 1992 at the Providence Medical Center in Wayne.

Fifty-eight individuals volunteered to donate. A total of 56 pints of blood were collected.

"We truly appreciate each and every one who came to donate," said Pam Masching, donor consultant.

The Blood Bank acknowledged the following individual long term donors from this area:

Five Gallon Donor: Gary West
 Three Gallon Donor: Milton Owens
 Two Gallon Donors: Judy F.

Martindale, Beverly Ruwe

One Gallon Donors: Robert J. Foxhoven, Peggy Hank, Kristine Robinson, Brian L. Frevert, Teresa J. Post, Mary C. Tieg

Masching also had words of praise for the volunteers who have helped to make the blood drives a success.

"Our ability to fulfill our commitment to area hospital patients is dependent on the involvement of caring communities such as Wayne," she said.

Wayne Legion sees season come to halt

The Wayne Junior Legion baseball team closed out their season in the B-3 Area Baseball Tournament in West Point but not before they eliminated the tournament's top seed in Platte Center.

Wayne came into the tournament sporting a 5-21 record and was defeated in the opening round by Blair. The locals fought back, however, and defeated West Point in the first round of the loser's bracket.

Wednesday night in West Point, Wayne notched its biggest upset with a 16-8 win over top seeded Platte Center, a team made up of Columbus players.

Both teams finished with 11 hits and Wayne suffered seven errors while Platte Center had five but Wayne took advantage of Platte Center's misfortune, thus eliminating them.

Brian Gamble was the winning pitcher and he got some great relief support from Tim Reinhardt. Reinhardt pitched the final 3 2/3 innings and allowed just four hits and two runs while striking out six.

Wayne never trailed in the contest after leading 4-2 in the first inning. They proceeded to add three runs in the second and one more in the third for an 8-3 lead.

Platte Center rallied in the fourth inning and scored four runs to tighten the gap to one at 8-7 but Wayne crossed home plate eight times in the fifth inning on just three hits. Platte Center walked three batters and suffered five errors in the inning which saw 13 Wayne batters come to the plate.

Tim Reinhardt was the offensive catalyst for Wayne with four singles and three rbi while Brent Gamble had a double and two singles and three rbi. He also scored three runs for the winners.

Dane Jensen had two singles and three rbi and Robert Longe and a single and an rbi while Brian Gamble had one base hit to round out the hits. Platte Center walked a total of 11 Wayne batters.

Wayne season ends

Thursday night in West Point, the Wayne season came to a halt as South Sioux defeated them soundly, 15-0. Todd Fredrickson took the loss with Brent Gamble and Robert Longe also seeing pitching time.

South Sioux pounded out 15 hits and suffered just one error while Wayne managed just two hits—singles by Tim Reinhardt and Fredrickson. Wayne also suffered five errors.

South Sioux scored two in the first inning and three in the second inning before exploding for 10 runs in the fourth inning on 11 hits and two Wayne errors.

Wayne closed out the season at 7-23 and they went 2-2 in the area tournament to finish third.

Coaches honored

The Nebraska Coaches Association will host its 25th Annual Awards and Recognition Banquet at the Villager Center in Lincoln on Wednesday.

The banquet is held in conjunction with the Multi-Sports Clinic that annually draws nearly 1500 coaches, AD's and presenters to Lincoln East High School for a three-day run.

This year's banquet will recognize two Wayne coaches for their respective service to interscholastic athletics at the high school and junior high level.

Don Koenig will receive a plaque and be allowed a few minutes at the podium to reminisce about his 25 years of service to Wayne athletics. Also receiving recognition at the banquet this year is Duane Blomenkamp.

Six years ago the Nebraska Coaches Association Board of Directors initiated a program to recognize the unsung heroes of successful high school athletic programs.

Junior high and assistant varsity coaches work in relative obscurity in their respective schools and the NCA felt the necessity to honor these outstanding individuals and their numerous contributions. This year the NCA will honor five of these individuals and Blomenkamp is among them.

Helps market price

Alternative ag uses have potential

Commodity boards check off funds from the sale of your crops for the purpose of research, development and promotion of Ag commodities. We often read of new products being marketed. Many of these we will never personally use, then again we use others that we don't always recognize.

The soy ink used to print this newspaper is an excellent example. Ethanol is another that we search out and use, but hopefully will be more widely accepted in the future. Alternative uses of ag products does have enormous potential. We know that even at the level of use today it helps the market price.

I am excited to announce that on Friday in the area of the Little Theater, the Nebraska Soybean Check Off Board will have a demonstration at the Wayne County Fair. The following articles explain the importance of the exhibit:

The popular "soy donut machine" will be at the Wayne County Fair at 8 a.m. on Friday, August 7. The machine is operated by the Nebraska Soybean Program to promote the healthy benefits of soybean food products like soy oil and soy flour.

Donut maker (and Director of Industry Information) Vic Bohuslavsky says he loves to make the donuts!

"The aroma of these little donuts cooking is hard to resist," says Bohuslavsky. "That usually makes me one of the most popular people at the fair and you can't beat that!"

The donuts are made from a mix containing soy flour. Flour made from soybeans is extra moist, adds shelf life and has higher protein than regular flour. Although shoppers will likely find soy flour only at health food stores, it is widely used by commercial bakers for its favorable baking qualities.

The donuts are then cooked in soy oil. Soy oil is low in saturated fat and has no cholesterol. Even though over 70% of the nation's cooking oil, margarine and salad dressing comes from soybeans, very few consumers can identify soy oil by name. That is because it is usually called "vegetable oil" on the label.

"We think the donut machine is an excellent way to promote our crop," says Bohuslavsky. "Since most people aren't aware of all the benefits of soy oil, a fresh, warm donut helps us get their attention and spread the good word about soybeans."

The donut machine is just one of the promotional tools funded by soybean producers through the nationwide checkoff. Bohuslavsky says reaching consumers is an important goal of the checkoff program and the donut machine is helping Nebraska growers reach that goal.

The Nebraska SoyDiesel pickup will be on display at the Wayne County Fair on Friday, Aug. 7. The pickup was purchased by the state's soybean farmers through their investment in the nationwide soybean checkoff, to test and promote SoyDiesel fuel. The pickup runs on a blend of 40% SoyDiesel and 60% #2 petroleum diesel. Research has shown SoyDiesel to have lower emissions that cause pollution; and SoyDiesel is manufactured from a renewable resource grown right here in Nebraska - soybeans.

Cecilia Grevson, Madison, who represents soybean farmers in this checkoff district on the Nebraska Soybean Board, said SoyDiesel is one of many new uses for soybeans that could help increase demand for the crop.

"As a soybean farmer, I'm looking for new products, new farming practices, better trade relations with foreign countries - anything that will help make raising soybeans more profitable," said Grevson. "That's the whole purpose of the soybean checkoff, to pool our resources with soybean farmers from all over the U.S. and work together to find ways to help ourselves."

"SoyDiesel is a very promising use for soybeans," she continued. "This new fuel is made by de-gumming and thinning the same kind of soybean oil we use for cooking. Once it goes through this process, it can run in any diesel engine, without modifications!"

SoyDiesel looks especially promising for cities with air pollution problems. Mass transportation managers, faced with buying new bus fleets or modifying the old ones, may well turn to SoyDiesel as a less costly solution. Forklift operators in confined areas praise the fuel for cutting down on fumes. Compliance with clean air standards is required by year's end.

"Right now we're focusing our marketing efforts on mass transit and closed building where they use diesel engines," said Grevson. "At present, the cost of a gallon of SoyDiesel is higher than a car owner or farmer would want to pay. But compared to the cost of say, purchasing a new bus, SoyDiesel can be a very economical way to meet these new pollution standards."

The Nebraska Soybean Board authorized the purchase of the pickup for research and demonstration purposes. The 1992 Ford XLT pickup, in red and white of course, will be used to show public officials and fleet managers how well the fuel works. The pickup will be driven to various locations for display throughout Nebraska and eventually will be analyzed for long term effects. Similar research pickups in Missouri have shown no difference from regular diesel engines even after 100,000 miles or more.

TRISH LUTT, 18 and her nine-year-old Quarter Horse won the senior reining reserve championship July 16 at the 1992 Fanner Park State 4-H Horse Exposition in Grand Island. Trish, the daughter of Louis and Mavis Lutt of Wayne, showed Galaxy Cody for the win. Trish's trophy was donated by Platte Valley Saddle Shop of Kearney.

Lutt competing in Fort Worth

American Quarter Horse enthusiast Trish Lutt of Wayne will be competing in the 21st Annual American Junior Quarter Horse Association World Championship Show & Convention in Fort Worth, Texas, Aug. 8-15. Lutt will be among 1,600 youth, ages 19 and under, from the United States and several foreign countries participating in the show. She will compete with her American Quarter Horse Galaxy Cody, a nine year old bay mare in reining.

The AJQHA World Championship Show is an invitational event which serves as a showcase for top American Quarter Horse exhibitors, so competition promises to be intense and exciting. Young competitors vying for 29 world championship titles, as well as prizes, must earn a predetermined number of points at American Quarter Horse Association-approved shows between May 1, 1991 and April 30, 1992, or be one of two entries in each event nominated to represent each state's junior Quarter Horse Association.

The 1992 AJQHA World Championship Show is sponsored by Wrangler Jeans & Shirts, in conjunction with Drysdale's Western Store, GMC Truck, Miller's Harness Company, Resistol Hats and Sooner Trailer Manufacturing. Highlights of the show will air on "American's Horse," AQHA's monthly television special on the cable sports network ESPN. Air dates are set for Saturday, Aug. 22, at 11 a.m. Central and Monday, Aug. 31, at 2 p.m. Central. Viewers should check local listings for broadcast dates and times in their area.

The AJQHA World Championship Show is the featured activity of the week, but other scheduled events include the AJQHA Convention, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 8 and 9, which allows state delegates to conduct AJQHA business and elect six national officers to represent the more than 22,000 members of AJQHA -- the world's largest youth equine organization. Also included are the AJQHA Speech Contest, Tuesday, Aug. 11, featuring the presentation of two $500 scholarships, and the AJQHA World Championship Judging Contest for AJQHA, 4-H and National FFA Organization members, Wednesday, Aug. 12.

Show week also offers a variety of social activities and an Exposition and Trade Show, featuring numerous equine-related products and services, and individuals may request performance and race records concerning registered American Quarter Horses at the AQHA booth.

Lutt is the 18 year old daughter of Louis and Mavis Lutt of Wayne. She will be a freshman at Methodist College of Nursing in Omaha this fall.

THE NEBRASKA SOYDIESEL pickup will be on display at the Wayne County Fair on Friday, Aug. 7.

Warm, humid weather can cause brown patches on lawns

Brown patches of dead and dying grass in the lawns of many eastern Nebraska homeowners can be indirectly attributed to July's wet and warm weather, according to a University of Nebraska-Lincoln plant pathologist said.

John Watkins said brown patch disease, which thrives in warm and humid weather, forms circular patches or rings from 6 to 24 inches in diameter that can either be isolated or clustered with other patches.

Individual leaf blades affected by brown patch have irregular ash-gray lesions surrounded by a dark borders, he said.

Watkins said homeowners, turfgrass managers and golf course superintendents should look for brown patch symptoms and follow these recommendations to maintain healthy turf when the disease is present:

- Avoid heavy fertilizer applications in summer.
- Use only slow-release nitrogen fertilizers.
- Remove grass clippings when turf shows brown patch symptoms. Once the disease is controlled, the clippings can be left for mulch.
- Water turf infrequently and deeply, but never during late evening.
- Apply a registered fungicide at the first signs of brown patch disease. More than one application might be needed if warm and humid conditions last for more than two weeks.

Congressional assistants to share farm experiences

They will come representing all parts of the United States: 12 legislative aides to urban Members of Congress will take time during the Congressional recess to learn more about the people and the process of agricultural production.

The 12 aides will visit Nebraska Aug. 14 to 17 in Nebraska Farm Bureau's Legislative Assistants Visitation Program. Each will spend the long weekend on a Farm Bureau member's farm.

"Most of these legislative assistants are stuck in an office dissecting agricultural issues working with mounds of paper work and books on their desks. This visit to Nebraska will help them see the agriculture industry from the inside out," said Rob Robertson, Farm Bureau assistant director of public affairs.

"We are trying to tie production agriculture in with food processing and agriculture research to show them the entire process from field to the grocery store," he said. This is the fifth year for the program. Each year 12 legislative aides are recommended by Nebraska Rep. Doug Bereuter's Washington staff, Robertson said. All handle agriculture or natural resources issues for their Member of Congress. However, their knowledge of agriculture is limited. As rural America shrinks in population, there is less rural influence in government, Robertson said.

"We want to give the legislative assistants background on rural American life to build better relationships between rural and urban people. This visit is not a lobbying effort, but simply a chance for the legislative assistants to learn. As a result, they can give agricultures perspective on the issues so urban Members of Congress may be able to better understand rural America," Robertson said.

Farm Bureau host families will meet their guests in Lincoln Aug. 14 and take them to the farm. "First we will visit the University of Nebraska's Food Processing Center, where legislative aides can see firsthand how the food grown by farmers is processed. We want them to understand that the goal is to make agriculture products more appealing to the consumer," he said.

At the farm, host families will go about their daily chores. But they will also find time to introduce the aides to agriculture in their counties, Robertson said. "In the past, the aides have wanted to get the full experience of what it is like to live on a farm or ranch. Many have helped feed the livestock, farrowed pigs, irrigated crops, whatever the farm family was doing," Robertson said.

While most go into this experience with stereotypes about farmers and agriculture, many walk away appreciating what farmers and ranchers do, Robertson said. "Most are surprised at how complex agriculture is and how farmers and ranchers really need to be good businessmen," he said.

The Farm Bureau host families are their visiting legislative aides in this area are:

CARROLL -- Bill Claybaugh, member of Wayne County Farm Bureau, will host Peter Kapelke, legislative assistant for Rep. C. Thomas McMillen (D-Md); 402/585-4867.

DIXON -- Harold and Marie George, members of Dixon County Farm Bureau, will host Sandy Zimmed, legislative assistant for Rep. Constance Morella (R-Md); 402/584-2625.

MADISON -- David and Maureen Frisch, members of Madison County Farm Bureau, will host Christopher Henry, legislative assistant for Rep. Floyd Flake (D-N.Y.); 402/454-3494.

RANDOLPH -- Roger and Roxanne Meyer, members of Wayne County Farm Bureau, will host Julie Taiber, legislative assistant for Rep. David Nagle (D-Iowa); 402/337-0788.

Chemicals handled to protect groundwater

By Robert Fraass
IANR News Assistant

Most Nebraska farmers who responded to a University of Nebraska-Lincoln study know groundwater can be contaminated through improper handling and disposal of pesticides.

Ninety-three percent of a random sample survey of 517 agricultural producers said they prepare pesticide applications away from water wells and most burn unwanted pesticide containers rather than haul them to landfills.

Both practices help keep pesticides out of groundwater, said Larry Schulze, a study co-author and University of Nebraska-Lincoln pesticide coordinator.

The 1989 UNL Cooperative Extension survey results showed that 72 percent of respondents burn their paper or soft plastic pesticide containers while 13 percent dump them in landfills. When disposing of metal or hard plastic pesticide containers, 53 percent said they burn them while 27 percent use landfills.

Most producers said improper container disposal does not occur in their communities.

Schulze said that pesticide container recycling programs should be established given the growing number of Nebraska landfill closings.

Farmers who reported having leftover pesticides said they store some or all of the leftover concentrate for future use (89 percent) or return some or all of the leftover concentrate to a pesticide dealer (33 percent).

Within five years of the survey, pesticides were used by 87 percent of farmers while 85 percent used herbicides, 75 percent used insecticides and 29 percent used fungicides.

Among herbicide users, 59 percent preferred single herbicide application per field methods compared to 41 percent who favored multiple application methods.

Nearly all herbicide users employed at least one broadcast technique while the banded-to-soil approach was used by 43 percent of producers who rely on a single application method per field.

Schulze suggests that the economic and environmental advantages of banded herbicide applications be emphasized to farmers.

Among insecticide users, one in five report using decreased amounts of insecticide, an indication that field scouting and integrated pest management techniques are influencing farmers' practices, he said.

Nearly all farmers surveyed scout fields for insect pest problems, the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources specialist pointed out.
