

State Senator is on legal hotseat

By Les Mann
Of the Herald

State Sen. Kurt Hohenstein has no plans to resign his 17th District legislative seat pending an investigation into wrong-doing while he was Dakota County attorney his office indicated Tuesday.

Hohenstein has voluntarily surrendered his license to practice law in Nebraska, a move which his attorney, David Domina, said is an admission of wrong-doing only involving his private practice and having nothing to do with his service as a public official. The move also halts investigative and enforcement efforts of the bar association.

However, Friday, his successor as Dakota County Attorney and personal friend Maurice Redmond asked for a special prosecutor to be appointed to proceed with "probable" criminal charges against the freshman senator.

Redmond said he wanted a special prosecutor to avoid any potential conflict of interest in the case.

Nebraska District Judge Mark Fuhman appointed Oakland attorney Clarence E. Mock as special prosecutor on Saturday. Mock has said he intends to look into Hohenstein's handling of money belonging to his law firm and handling of funds in public accounts he administered.

Finances for the Northeast Nebraska drug enforcement program and a victim assistance program were cited as two areas of special concern. Reports have also been circulating that the FBI has become involved in the investigation but an Omaha FBI spokesman would not confirm or deny that his agency was involved.

Hohenstein's office Tuesday said the senator is proceeding with his legislative duties including service on the Appropriations Committee and was directing all requests for information about the case to his attorney.

Hohenstein on Friday distributed a letter to his colleagues in the Legislature, saying he would surrender his license to practice law "because of disciplinary violation of the rules of ethics of the Nebraska State Bar Association."

Hohenstein's letter didn't describe the violation, but he said the violation occurred "several years ago before I began serving in the Nebraska Legislature."

The State Attorney General's office last week sent a copy of an investigative report to Redmond for "review and for whatever action he deemed appropriate," Deputy Attorney General Sam Grimminger told the Sioux City newspaper.

Grimminger, who handled the case, said he couldn't comment on the source of the investigative report.

"We've reviewed the material and concluded this is something that needed to be called to the attention of the Dakota County attorney,"

Fun at the Fair

An estimated 75 youngsters and several parents attended a Children's Fun Fair Saturday morning and afternoon at Wayne's West Elementary School, sponsored by the Wayne Area Child Care Providers, Wayne preschools and Wayne State College child development students. The event was designed to kick off the annual Week of the Young Child celebration. Among the children attending was Corissa Arickx, who is pictured having her face painted by Joan Arkfeld. A poster containing hand prints of youngsters attending the morning session is on display at Quality Foods Center, while another poster containing hand prints of children attending the afternoon session is being displayed at Pac 'N' Save.

Taxes are due

WAYNE COUNTY — The first half of 1992 real estate taxes will become delinquent if they have not already been paid by May 1, according to Wayne County Treasurer Leon Meyer.

While other county offices will be closed on April 30, to celebrate Arbor Day, Meyer said he will keep the treasurer's office open that day to allow last-minute taxpayers to pay on time.

Correction

WAYNE — The Friday Wayne Herald story on food stamp usage in Wayne County incorrectly reported that only $13,528 worth of USDA Food Stamps were distributed to families in 1992. It's 'spring cleaning' time in Wayne

It's spring cleaning time for yards, alleys and lots in Wayne.

Annually since 1989, the Wayne Jaycees have volunteered to canvass the town with pickups collecting large refuse items left on the curbs.

This Friday is the day for the pickup and Jaycee Chairman Garry Poutre is encouraging residents to survey their lots and alleys and haul the eyesore items to the curb.

It is fitting that the clean-up is this week, said Poutre, since this is Earth Week. The rain date has been set for Saturday, April 24. The Herald had originally reported the rain date as the date for the actual pickup, but Jaycees will start throughout the town on Friday evening at 6 p.m. said Poutre.

Lawn clippings will not be picked up this year, he emphasized.

Approximately 20 Jaycees and other volunteers in ten trucks will be out hauling the stuff away Friday.

Poutre suggested residents check streets, alleys, ditches, parks and other public properties for refuse as well as their own lots. The clean-up is designed to get rid of paper, plastic, metal objects and bulky items as well as twigs and branches.

The effort is not planned to help home owners haul off garage or basement refuse, he said. No refrigerators or other appliances and furniture items will be accepted. The Jaycees ask that items left on the curbs be in easily handled containers.

Volunteers with pickups are still needed to help with the project, he said. The group will be gathering at 5:30 p.m. at the Light Plant for assignment of clean-up sectors.

Poutre said the lack of extended periods of good weather so far this year has meant a lot of residents haven't been able to get out and get this cleaned up. He said he hopes residents will have the opportunity to get to their clean-up work this week.

The City of Wayne permits the Jaycees free dumping privileges at the transfer station for the clean-up effort.

Anyone with questions or those who would like to volunteer to help may call Poutre at 375-4693 at home or 375-2896 at work.

Libraries change lives

By LaVon Anderson
News Editor

Row upon row of books afford hour upon hour of pleasure to persons who visit their local library.

While the library can be a source of pure relaxation, it also serves as a resource center for students and others seeking information on thousands of topics.

During National Library Week, April 18-24, area residents were asked by Wayne Public Librarian Jolene Klein to submit testimonials on how the library has changed their lives.

Following are four testimonials written by Dr. Francis Haun, Dr. Donald Mash, Irene Salitros and Amy Magnuson.

"I CAN remember going to the library when I was small, about three or four, and always loving the fascinating shelves upon shelves of books there," says 11-year-old Amy Magnuson of Wayne.

Devils change class

By Kevin Peterson
Sports editor

The Nebraska School Activities Association approved the first reclassification of the state's high schools since 1983, last Friday.

The move will prove monumental for Wayne High School because beginning in the fall of 1994 the Blue Devils will become a Class C-1 school for the first time in history.

The fall from the Class B ranks will not just be felt by Wayne, as 38 other Class B schools will no longer reign in the second largest class.

Class A currently has 32 teams but that will shrink to 24. Class B will shrink from its current 64-team status to 32 with Classes C-1, C-2, D-1 and D-2 picking up the slack.

Classes C-1 and C-2 will have 64 teams in each while Classes D-1 and D-2 will grow to about 79 teams each.

Wayne athletic director Ron Carnes says there are pros and cons to the reclassification system. "I have positive feelings to the extent that we know we will be competing against schools that are more equal to our size," Carnes said. "The system is set up with a two-to-one ratio which means that no school in your class is more than twice your enrollment for grades 9-11."

As of now, West Point Central Catholic will be the smallest C-1 school with 117 students while Columbus Lakeview will be the largest at 233. Wayne will be near the top of the class with 209 students in grades 9-11.

Carnes did say, however, that he's disappointed that not all of the sports are being reclassified. "What I don't think is right is that several of our sports including wrestling, track, golf and cross country will still be competing on the Class B level but our football, volleyball and basketball teams will be competing at C-1," Carnes said.

Carnes added that district assignments in volleyball and basketball will be changed along with changes in sites where districts are played.

President responds

Young Lance Zechmann of Carroll couldn't have been more tickled than when he recently received a letter postmarked from the White House. Lance, son of Bill and Jane Zechmann and a first grader at Carroll Elementary School, wrote to President Clinton shortly after he was elected, telling him that he watched the election results on TV and hoped to meet him someday. "I wanted to write because he was a new president and, besides, he has the same first name as my dad," smiles Lance, who is pictured holding a letter he received back from the President last week. President Clinton told Lance that is honored to be his President and that enjoys hearing from young people because they are the future of the country.

Old tax ghost laid to rest

By Melvin Paul
 Statehouse Correspondent
 Nebraska Press Association

The old ghost may have finally been chased away.
 For years, six to be exact, Nebraskans have complained that the income tax system is unfair, nicking those at the low end too much and not going enough after the well-to-do.
 One needs to only look at the election of 1990 to know how strongly Nebraskans felt that.
 That's the year they threw Kay Orr out of the governor's office.

They figured it was her 1987 income tax overhaul, which without a doubt shifted taxes from the rich to the not-so-wealthy, that caused all the problems. And they let her have it, even though she twice later passed bills attempting to deal with the situation.
 That issue made a governor out of Ben Nelson. Heck, most people didn't know who this guy with the unshakable hairdo was. But he wasn't Kay Orr, and that was good.
 It also probably helped that he promised to "fix" the state income tax system.
 Well, it took three years, but

Nelson finally delivered on that promise last week.
 The Legislature voted final approval to a bill shifting $12 million in income tax burden from the lower end on to the higher earners.
 If you are on the low end and were thinking about how you were going to spend the money from your new Ben Nelson tax cut, don't get too carried away.
 The average reduction for the 400,000 folks, most of them families with incomes of $75,000 or less, is only about 30 bucks. For a few low-income families in special circumstances, the savings could amount to $100.

 For that reason, a lot of opponents claimed it was a do-nothing bill that in reality would do very little for people.
 But at the same time, some low-income people could probably take some satisfaction that the bill sticks it to the rich to the tune of $12 million. Soaking the rich today certainly makes good politics.
 And this, after all, was a political issue. Democrats like Nelson exploited the heck out of it in the election three years ago. A lot of Republicans weren't going to sit back and let him exploit it some more.

Regardless of your political stripe, I think the best argument for the bill was made by a Republican Sen. Jerome Warner of Waverly, the chairman of the Revenue Committee.

Though a big defender of Kay Orr and her policies, he supported and even pushed for Nelson's bill all the way through.
 Whether it's a big amount of money or not, he said, the change is an equitable one and hopefully will restore some of the confidence that Nebraskans, rightly or wrongly, had lost in their tax system.

It was kind of coincidental that the bill passed on April 14, the day before tax day. Though it won't take effect until next year's tax year, hopefully the bill made folks feel a little better as they drove to the post office the next day.
 And maybe now the ghost can be laid to rest.

The views expressed in Capitol News are those of the writer and not necessarily those of the Nebraska Press Association.

Drivers urged to be more careful

Dear Editor:
 In response to Mrs. Kardell's letter, we would like to reinforce what she is saying. Bus drivers are required to take a 10 hour level I class as well as physical and screening for accidents and traffic violations. The class is to help them learn the proper way to control traffic and safely pick up and transport your students to and from school.
 The yellow amber flashing lights on a school bus means that there are children standing on or near the roadway and that you as a driver should slow down and be prepared to stop for the school bus stop arm that soon will be out to allow students to get on or off the school bus.

To drivers that think they are in too much of a hurry to stop, think about how you would feel if that 6 or 7 year old child stops out on the road and you injure or kill that child while their parents stand at the front door and watch helplessly as you just run a stop sign because you were in a hurry. As bus drivers, we would be devastated if that would happen. So please stop for the red flashing lights and stop arms for our school busses.

Thank You from your

Hoskins couple praised by USO

Dear Editor:
 Once again, outstanding support from every part of the country made the recently-completed Christmas and Valentine mail programs tremendously successful. This past Christmas, bundles of friendly cards and letters were sent to more than 1,000 units, bases and support locations (such as other USOs, Armed Services YMCAs and hospitals) all across the U.S., including Nebraska, and around the world.

A special thanks to Peggy and Rick Staumbaugh of Hoskins who were the top Nebraska individuals in both the 1992 Christmas and 1993 Valentine mail call programs.
 Interested readers may learn how to help boost the morale of our service men and women at more than 1,000 places all across the U.S. and around the world by sending a first-class postage stamp (return envelopes cannot be used — just the stamp to cover postage) to: USO Mail Call, P.O. Box 608, Fort Knox, KY 40121-0608. A copy of the next information folder will be sent when published later in the year. Thank you!

Student seeks Wayne information

Dear Editor:
 Hi, my name is Ellissa Johnson. I am a fifth grader here at Olivewood Elementary. I chose your state for a state report. For my state report I have some questions. I will list my questions for you. What are the schools like, what was it like 20 years ago, do you have enough work places for people and how many people was the population of Wayne? Hopefully, some of your readers will respond.

Chickens are our friends

I paid my respects at the Chicken Shrine last week.
 It was a fitting tribute from a resident of the Home of the Chicken Show. I gawked dumbfounded and craned my neck to look out the plane's window as the pilot told his disinterested passengers they were currently passing over the giant chicken on their way to a landing in Atlanta.
 I think I saw the thing, although I was decidedly unimpressed. You've heard about it or read about it, no doubt. Col. Saunders erected a giant chicken statue at one of the original Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants in Georgia. Last year the folks in that town conducted a successful drive to save the bird from the wrecking ball and refurbished it as a landmark.
 I am proud to say that I have been there, or rather over there. I've seen it from a fitting position and for a fitting period of time (1,000 feet and 2.3 seconds, I'd guess).
 The Chicken Show Committee should probably make a pilgrimage to the shrine at least once a year.
 If this report doesn't get you into the mood to celebrate the 13th annual Chicken Show this July 9 and 10, then perhaps these other reports, gleaned for recent news accounts will help.

Mann Overboard

By Les Mann

'Pulletical' action committee

Until now I didn't know chickens were politically active. But, a West Virginia legislator complained this week that a flock of chickens pounced on his car, marked it with indecent deposits and made him late for the legislative session.
 "Chickens jumped on my car, dozens of them. They were everywhere. They just don't move," said Delegate Gil White, R-Ohio. Them dang Democrat chickens fell out of a truck, blocking the interstate for half an hour and forcing the lawmaker to detour through a car wash before proceeding to the statehouse.
 Must be a new "pulletical" action committee. Chickens for Better Government.

Chickens can be heroes

Another example in the "Chickens Can Be Heroes" department is the report of chickens used in the war against mosquitoes in California. Yes, really. Californians have 117 flocks of chickens stationed in favorite mosquito haunts. They are out there in the front lines getting bit.
 The chickens are used by the health department to determine if mosquitoes are carrying potentially fatal encephalitis disease. Health officials monitor the antibodies the birds produce toward the disease to determine if the mosquitoes are carrying it.
 Their work as mosquito bait means the health officials get early warnings about the outbreak of illness and can take quicker action to combat the problems.
 As wet as it has been around here this year, it is likely to be a banner year for mosquitoes. Maybe we should lay in an extra supply of chickens. The Californians claim mosquitoes like tender chicken skin over tougher human and mammal hides.
 Chickens are our friends.

Believe in a bright tomorrow

Dear Editor:
 As we embark on a new decade, there are some who may view the future as bleak. However, there is great reason to believe in a bright tomorrow. That reason is the millions of volunteers who make the difference between organizations that meet community needs and organizations that are unable to meet those needs. In the 1990s, volunteers will make the difference between communities that radiate progress and those that reek of despair.
 VOLUNTEER, the National Center for Volunteerism, first celebrated National Volunteer Week in April of 1974. It is a special time set aside each year to recognize those people who donate their time and talents to help others and also a time to recruit new volunteers.
 National Volunteer Week provides continual recognition for volunteer contributions and, we hope, motivates others to get involved in community service activities. National Volunteer Week, sponsored by VOLUNTEER, is an occasion devised for these two purposes.

 Northeast Nebraska is fortunate to have 4-H volunteers who are committed to helping area youth meet the 90s with self-confidence through positive activities and encouragement. Their commitment is changing the lives of our young people.
 It is a time to celebrate volunteerism. Volunteers should be recognized throughout the year. However, National Volunteer Week, slated for April 18-24, 1993, provides the opportunity to commend volunteers in extraordinary ways.
 And this is the best time to give public recognition to our 4-H volunteers for a job well done. Thanks, 4-H volunteers! Without you there would hardly be a 4-H program at all.

BONING UP ON SAFETY: The American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons reports that 87 percent of the over 280,000 hip fractures that occur each year happen to people 65 and older, with women over 65 having a one to five chance of fracturing their hips in their lifetime. Weakened bones are more likely to break in a fall. Since falls are the major cause of breaks, the risk of falling must be reduced wherever possible. The following AAOS checklist can help make your home fall-resistant. (Due to space limitations, this week, we'll focus on the three most dangerous areas - stairs, kitchen and bathroom.)

STAIRS AND STEPS Do not leave objects on the stairs. Provide enough light to see all stairs and top and bottom landings. Do not use patterned or dark-colored carpeting on stairs. Repair loose stairway rugs or boards immediately. Put non-slip treads on each bare-wood step. Put in handrails 30 inches above the stairs on BOTH sides of the stairway, and extend them the full length of the stairs.

KITCHEN Clean up at once liquids, grease or food spills on the floor. Store food, dishes, cooking equipment within easy reach. Use a step-stool with a HANDRAIL attached. Repair loose flooring. Use non-skid floor wax.

BATHROOM Place a slip-resistant rug adjacent to the bathtub for safe exit and entry. Install a night-light in the bathroom. Place nonskid adhesive textured strips on the bottom of the bathtub or shower. Use a sturdy plastic seat in the bathtub if you cannot lower yourself to the floor of the tub, or if you are unsteady. Install handrails on the bathroom walls near the toilet and along the bathtub. Stabilize yourself on the toilet by using either a raised seat or a special toilet seat with armrests. Mount a liquid soap dispenser on the bathtub/shower wall.

The GOLDEN YEARS by Pat Lichty

Legislation effective for 1993 makes an important change for employees taking lump-sum distribution from retirement plans, whether they retire, quit or are laid off. In the past, people taking such distributions had 60 days to roll the sums into an IRA or other approved plan without facing taxes or penalties. The new rule subjects such lump-sum distributions to a 20-percent withholding tax if an employee collects a distribution, even if intending to roll it into an IRA. To avoid the withholding tax, tell the retirement plan administrator to transfer the sum directly to an IRA or other plan.

Marty Dupraw got a law degree in the 1920s but there were few jobs. So he became a court reporter, using shorthand skills developed in high school. From 1925 to 1927 his 280-words-per-minute earned the title of World's Fastest Shorthand Reporter. He retired in 1976, but at 86 continues to freelance and volunteer. One of the few shorthand reporters still at it in the electronic age, he turns down more work than he takes.

"However, the most distinct memories come from when I was about five. I can remember the first time I went to story-hour. We listened to stories, watched movies, and had lots of fun.

"It was really neat, but I wanted more. I not only wanted to come to story hour again, I wanted to read.

"The library provided an abundant supply of materials to practice with. The library also took me places I had never been before. I went to Prince Edward Island in Canada, I've been dog sledding in Alaska, and I've been to Maine on an unforgettable summer vacation.

"I've gone deep underneath the ocean exploring and I've been to Arabia riding Arabian horses.

"Reading has also helped my imagination and my writing skills. I credit my descriptive talents to all of the reading that I have done. Since I am 11, I look forward to many more adventures and years of reading at the library."

"LIBRARIES have been an important part of my life for the past 50 years," points out Dr. Francis Haun, former superintendent of Wayne Public Schools.

"My first experience in checking out library books for pleasure reading occurred in a small South Dakota town. The library was located in a tiny room on the second floor of the city auditorium. It was open on Wednesday nights and Saturday afternoons.

"It was from this library that I read the complete series of "Tom Swift," "Baseball Joe" and "Hardy Boys." Zane Grey books were also read with enthusiasm.

Adkins earns scholarship

Competing against approximately 6,500 school winners from throughout the United States, Betsy Adkins, a Laurel-Concord High School senior, has been awarded a National Principal's Leadership Award.

Les Owen, principal at Laurel-Concord School, today announced the award, which includes a $1,000 college scholarship. One-hundred

"While these books were not considered literature, I did learn to read for pleasure. I also learned to read rapidly and to concentrate totally upon whatever I chose to read.

"These reading traits have stayed with me. I have over the years been a patron of the libraries in every town in which I have lived. I have also used libraries located on several military bases in the United States as well as Japan. I learned that military troop ships even have libraries.

"Professionally, I served as a student library assistant through four years of undergraduate school. I have used university libraries for research purposes while preparing two theses and one dissertation. My memory also associates a review of the literature with almost all graduate classes.

"I retired from active work in education in 1992 after 39 years of teaching and administration. Today, I am catching up on reading selected books that I missed earlier. I am also keeping up fairly well with current authors thanks to an excellent Wayne Public Library.

"I read without discipline, although I favor biography. Libraries will probably be a source of pleasure to me for the rest of my active life. They and their books are almost an addiction. This condition has not always been appreciated by significant others."

"IT WAS a typical Carnegie library, brick and square and solid, with a grand entrance of steps and letters carved in stone.

"I recall first going up those steps in my pre-reading days, tagging along behind my older sister, who was already repeating versions of Laura Ingalls woes and "Wind in the Willows" escapades to me," says Irene Salizros, a frequent visitor to the library.

"I found this to be a curious building, with its smells of lilac and freshly mowed grass, old wood and Pine-Sol mopped tile, leather and paper and ink. Chairs made just for me...a whole room meant just for me...I vowed that when I was big enough to read I'd start at one end and not stop 'til every book had been perused.

"And I challenged myself each summer with that vow, as I sat under the apple trees curled up with my stack for the week. So much fun — for free!

"As a teen, the library became the acceptable hang-out. Sure, mom would drop me off to 'study' — easier than asking to go to the drug store for a Coke!

"But even the temptations of socializing couldn't remove that feeling of power, of learning taking place inside. As luck would have it, my college days work-study duties had me assigned to the campus library.

"What masses of books, tapes, videos, what an incredible task of putting it all in order, the choices needed to be made. Suddenly I realized the hopelessness — I could never know it all — I could never finish learning!

"Today, even with three children in tow, entering a library is a comforting feeling...a bit like entering a church with its feelings of cool quiet, the secrets held within, the individual personalities and choices and effects. So much to share, so much to know.

"I overcome my guilt for jobs undone and allow myself a taste of childhood summer; a glass of lemonade, a tree, and a book to read.

"Thank you Dale Carnegie, thank you city libraries, for the pleasure and knowledge you've shared with me and so many others."

"AS I LOOK back on my childhood visits to the public library, to me it was like being turned loose in a Toys R Us with no financial restrictions," says Dr. Donald J. Mash, president of Wayne State College. "It was so exciting.

"Later in life I realized that the public library was a great socioeconomic equalizer because it was one of the few important material things everyone could have — books, wonderful books."

Postal Service gets 'thumbs up'

Nebraska and western Iowa postal customers gave the U.S. Postal Service a resounding "thumbs up" approval rating in the second quarter for 1993, announced Central Plains District Customer Services Manager W. Larry Howell and Wayne Postmaster Dave Kirkpatrick.

Independent measurement by Opinion Research Corp. indicated 91 percent of the households in Nebraska and western Iowa rate their service "excellent," "very good" or "good" — up three percentage points over last year's figure.

"This is slightly better than the national average of 89 percent, the highest satisfaction rating since measurement began nearly two years ago," said Howell. "Expanded retail window hours across the state, parcel delivery on the two Sundays before Christmas and a renewed dedication to customer satisfaction by postal employees made our performance during the holiday mailing season the best ever."

The Opinion Research Corp. surveyed hundreds of postal customers throughout the state and asked their opinions on such topics as complaint handling, lobby lines, timely deliveries and employee attitudes.

"This quarterly survey helps us keep in touch with the needs of our customers," said Howell. "By taking their input to heart, we strengthen our commitment to providing and improving our products and services."

Men: Avoid Caffeine Before Exercise?

If you have even mild high blood pressure, it might be best to stay away from foods and beverages that contain caffeine before exercising. At a recent scientific meeting, as reported in American Family Physician, the audience was told that men with mild high blood pressure who drink coffee before exercising may be placing extra stress on already burdened hearts. Even at rest, caffeine can increase blood pressure by as much as 10 percent. This effect begins 30 minutes after consuming caffeine and lasts for at least three hours.

A study to evaluate caffeine's effect on exercise involved 28 men 30 to 45 years of age. All were regular coffee drinkers; 17 had high blood pressure. Heart rates rose significantly in men who had high blood pressure, consumed caffeine, and then exercised. However, heart rates of men who did not have high blood pressure did not increase after caffeine and exercise.

Mallettes retiring as team

By Al Kosse
Herald Correspondent

Mike and Donna Mallette work good as a team.

They are each other's own best friend and after a collaborated 78 years of classroom-teaching, they will retire as a team too.

The Mallettes have spent the past 29 years working together in the Wayne Public School system — Mike in the high school and middle school industrial arts department, and Donna teaching in the first grade.

"It'll just be good not to be pushing a time clock on such a regular basis," Mike says as both he and his wife take early retirement after the 1992-93 school year.

NEITHER one is anxious to leave the class room as much as they are ready to enjoy the basics of life a little more.

"We want to be able to spend more time with our children and grandchildren and do the things we've always wanted to do, like ski," Donna says. "But most of all, when it gets bitterly cold on those winter mornings next school year, we can sleep in."

"We might spend a little time in Arizona after it gets cold next February," Mike says, "after the pheasant hunting season, of course." He is an avid game bird hunter of both pheasant and duck.

Although hunting is one of the few things the Mallettes don't do together, Donna is sure to send along a faithful companion in Meg, their Golden Retriever, to keep Mike company.

"THE BEST part of retiring will be doing all the little things you can't do with a confined school schedule," Mike goes on.

"Our kids, Paul and Holly, live in Colorado and Utah, and there is just no way to go there during the whole school year. We feel we miss a lot that way."

Paul has a doctorate degree in business management while teaching classes at Colorado State University. Even though they can't visit him often, a proud mom and dad are lucky enough to see him twice a week.

The 1976 Wayne High graduate teaches a course on television's Mind Extension University every Tuesday and Thursday.

Holly, a 1978 Blue Devil alumni, has followed in her mother's footsteps as a first grade teacher near Provo, Utah.

Besides checking up on their kids and skiing near their condominium in Winter Park, Colo., the Mallettes plan to kick off their retirement this November with a deep-sea fishing expedition in Mexico.

WAYNE will always provide a home with which to touch base the couple agree. After all, it's where they met during their freshman year of college at Wayne State in 1950. She was a cheerleader. He, a four-year letter winner with the varsity basketball team.

Mike grew up and graduated from Uehling High School (now part of Logan View High). He turned down several professional baseball contracts to graduate from Wayne State in the spring of 1956 after several years in the service.

Donna is a Hartington native who graduated the same year from Wayne State and married Mike the same summer.

She taught two years each at Hooper and Coleridge before the pair joined together in a move to the West Point school system.

The couple stayed there for eight years, moving to the Wayne schools in 1964. Donna taught for three years at the Hahn School on the college campus before re-shuffling to her present location.

Mike has been with the applied science division in both the high school and middle school settings during the same 29 year period and was also a 20-year baseball coach for the Blue Devils. He guided three teams to Nebraska state championship titles and finished with another half dozen runner-up finishes to his credit.

His success on the diamond may have derived from tutelage he received from major league manager Billy Martin. Martin was his service team's manager at Fort Carson, Colo. and the two became good acquaintances while sharing the same barracks.

BOTH Mike and Donna attribute their longevity in the classroom to discipline and sticking to the basic principles of life.

"For those going into the field of education today," Mike said, "they better do very well in their course work of study because employers really do ask us what kind of students they were themselves."

"It's also important," Donna said, "because the kids are much more traveled; much more advanced than when I first started teaching. Now, at the first grade level at least, we teach a lot more hands-on skills because everyone really needs the basics."

Mike agrees with the fundamental approach saying, "some people get so wrapped up in technology that they forget the necessary things that get them to where they're going in life."

"The most important thing in education, at any age, is that you follow direction. If there isn't order then very little learning takes place."

It's more challenging, beginning at the middle school level, because these days kids are more willing to challenge authority. As a teacher you have to quickly learn to discipline to maintain control and a learning environment.

"Besides," Donna adds, "kids feel more comfortable in a place where they know what's expected."

"We've certainly touched a lot of lives," she went on. "Hopefully, we've been able to do a lot of good."

THE DUO also modestly credit their co-workers with establishing a successful environment. "Not only are the parents easy to work with, but faculty rapport has been more than we could ever ask for," Donna said.

"We are fortunate to have rooms filled with fine students," Mike said. "We've talked before between ourselves on how good it makes us feel to close out in a happy way."

"It's never entered the picture to begin a count-down, like many do because of burnout," he added. "It's still fun to come to teach every day and probably will be until the last day comes."

"This is why we decided to settle down in Wayne to begin with," Donna says, satisfied with their choice to stay for 29 years. "I don't think you could find as good a working opportunity in a larger city. The education system here is great all around."

After May 25th, Donna can be found relaxing with crafts and paints, patiently waiting for her partner to finish driver education instruction some time in July.

Mike will continue to referee athletic events in the coming years, guiding all of us through the steps of quality teamwork.

DON DAMMAS, personnel manager of Norfolk Regional Center, speaks with students during the third annual Criminal Justice and Social Sciences Career Day at Wayne State College last Wednesday. Twenty-four local, state, federal and private employers representing a variety of service professions attended.

Senator

Grimminger said.

In the letter from the Nebraska Attorney General's Office concerns are raised about "commingling of funds" and the appearance of theft or conversion of money.

Hohenstein's former law partner Kurt T. Rager has also publicly accused the attorney of several specific instances of mishandling of partnership and county funds.

Hohenstein, 37, served as Dakota County attorney from 1986 until he was elected to the Legislature last November.

He also was in private practice at that time.

His attorney, David Domina, said Friday that he and Hohenstein discussed a course of action would be "of interest to the (Nebraska) Supreme Court."

All disciplinary proceedings involving lawyers are filed with the state Supreme Court.

"I'm sorry. I can't tell you if or when" Hohenstein's law license will be surrendered, Domina said from his home Sunday night.

Wayne, Wakefield are 'Tree Cities'

Nebraska Gov. Ben Nelson presented "Tree City USA" awards to 85 communities, including Wayne and Wakefield, at a ceremony Wednesday at the State Capitol.

"These communities deserve our thanks and gratitude for outstanding efforts to improve the most basic aspect of all our lives—our environment," Nelson said.

"Their efforts represent a commitment to themselves and to future generations," he said. "Through local cooperation and pride, they have given lasting life to their community and improved the quality of life for their residence. Their efforts represent Nebraska at its best."

The governor said Nebraska's commitment to tree planting is a long tradition. "It was here that Arbor Day and Tree City Awards were born and spread throughout the nation," the governor said, adding that "these gifts will forever mark our state and its people as far-sighted stewards of the land that sustains us."

Nelson said in recent years, there has been a widespread loss of trees throughout the state. "While this has been tragic, it has also served to remind us that our efforts to plant and maintain trees must not wane," he said. "Our citizens have answered this challenge with renewed vigor and we all have cause to be proud."

The Tree City USA designation is made annually in recognition of a community's forestry program. The awards, which include a Tree City USA flag, plaque and road sign, are presented by the National Arbor Day Foundation in cooperation with the Nebraska Forest Service in the UNL Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

First-year award recipients were: Albion, Alliance, Brady, Crofton, Hickman, Pierce, Snyder, South Sioux City, Stratton, Stuart, and Waco.

Ten-year awards went to: Blair, Friend, and North Platte. Five-year awards went to Arapahoe, Curtis, Gothenburg, Grand Island, Falls City, Oakland, Schuyler, and Scottsbluff.

Auburn has been active in the program for 17 years, the longest of any Nebraska community. Other Nebraska Tree Cities and their years of participation are: Broken Bow, Lincoln and Nebraska City, 16 years; Omaha and Fremont, 15 years; Stromsburg, 12 years; Seward, 11 years; Ogallala, nine years; Cook, David City, Humboldt, Imperial, McCook, Neligh, O'Neill, Ralston, Growth Awards were presented to 17 Tree Cities for community achievement and environmental improvement. A community is eligible if it is a Tree City for at least the second consecutive year and has spent at least as much on its community forestry program this year as it did last year.

The Growth Award recipients were: Auburn, Lincoln, Fremont, Seward, Ralston, Sidney, Boys Town, Offutt Air Force Base, Columbus, Beatrice, Falls City, Bennington, Gering, Wakefield, Elkhorn, Creighton and Papillion.

A spokesman for the school said 12 schools are expected to compete with between 300 and 400 students involved. Activities will begin at 8 a.m. and conclude around 5 p.m.

Concert bands and concert choirs will perform during the morning hours, with swing choirs and jazz bands scheduled in the afternoon. A schedule of school times is available at the Winside school for the general public's knowledge.

There will be a noon concession stand, and the public is invited to attend the competition all day or at various times throughout the day.

WINSIDE will have 24 groups performing in the contest, including vocal and instrumental duets, solos, trios, concert band, swing choir, girls glee, boys quintet, a saxophone quartet, freshman and senior ensemble, and girls sextet.

Music directors at Winside are LeNeil Quinn, vocal, and LiChelle Krause, band.

A pre-contest concert featuring the Winside musicians was presented on April 6. During the intermission, a drawing was held for a handmade full size quilt. The winner was Shirley Woslager of Carroll.

College gets good support

Northeast Nebraskans have given Northeast Community College high marks, according to a January survey. Great Plains Communications in Blair polled 665 people living in the college's 20-county service area about their image and awareness of Northeast.

The survey showed that 93 percent of the respondents felt Northeast provided a good value to its residents and another 93 percent felt Northeast would experience continued growth.

Over half of those surveyed (52 percent) had family members who had taken courses from Northeast. Eight-four percent said they would recommend the college to family and friends, and 60 percent had visited campus at least once.

Seventy-seven percent of those polled said Northeast provides adequate programs and services for their communities and 22 percent "didn't know." When asked to rate the quality of education Northeast provides, 53 percent rated the quality as "very good" or "outstanding," while 39 percent said they "didn't know."

"The apparent unfamiliarity about college programs by some residents indicates a need for enhanced public information efforts," says Dr. Robert Cow, president of Northeast.

Northeast is in the process of a self-study for reaccreditation by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools. Information from the image survey will be used in the self-study and in Northeast's five-year strategic planning.

South Texas is respite for the winter-weary

April 12—Noon

You knew it was time for me to take a little trip, right? (Amtrak to Cheyenne for a funeral does not count.) Well, I'm writing this in Houston. And it's very warm and moderately humid, and quite green—a real treat for winter-weary Nebraskans. Hopefully, it will be getting that way at home by the time we get there.

One of my friends in nursing school was from Ord; south of Ord, to be exact, in Mira Valley. Her Dad was a farmer, too, and I loved going home with her to a big, old farm house that was home to six Lange children. She also spent a few weekends on our farm at Waco. Her name is Carolyn, and our name pins carried our first initials and cast names; naturally, we called her Clange.

As we were explaining to her kids yesterday, strong friendships were forged in that nurse's dormitory: it was called "Survival." I made half a dozen lifetime friends there. I also lived with Carolyn in a big old house with three other classmates after we graduated. She was our maid of honor.

Her brother became a minister while we were becoming nurses; his first church was in Houston. Clange decided to leave God's country and find a job in Texas. That was 31 years ago. Of course, she found a husband, too, and they've visited us a time or two, but we've never been to their home.

In fact, I'd not even been in south Texas. I kept promising to come, but it never worked out.

So, comes my neighbor/cousin/Judeen. Her daughter happens to teach school in Houston, and her son is at College Station. And she happened to have a great travel agent who found round-trip tickets out of Kansas City, and she was planning to drive to K.C. on Wednesday of Holy Week, coming home on Easter Monday. Her farmer/husband was too busy to go, and mine didn't really want to be left talking to Carolyn's husband for five days. (Actually, he and John have a lot in common along political philosophies and would probably have managed fine.)

So, we had Easter dinner on Palm Sunday, I worked like mad to get my paperwork caught up (an ongoing problem for me), and found my summer clothes just in time to throw them in a suitcase.

Of all things, Carolyn is a director of a pediatric home health care agency! Do you think we had anything to talk about? I mean, besides the eight years since we had seen each other. We spent Saturday at Galveston and I got a mild sunburn.

I got a workout with her church choir: Maundy Thursday and Good Friday, plus two services on Easter Sunday. I've gained three pounds, had a respite from my pager and renewed a treasured friendship. Houston is big, beautiful and modern. Now I have to come back for a week to sightsee. Maybe I'll bring the Big Farmer to the Rodeo at the Astrodome.

For now, it's Back to Reality Time.

Student from Wayne wins top ROTC honor

Creighton University student and Reserve Officers' Training Corps cadet Daniel Wurdinger of Wayne has been named a 1993 recipient of the George C. Marshall ROTC Award.

Wurdinger, a Creighton senior majoring in political science, received the award during the 16th annual George C. Marshall ROTC awards ceremony which concluded April 16 in Lexington, Va., on the campuses of the Virginia Military Institute and Washington and Lee University.

The awards seminar, which included training and discussion on national security issues, was attended by 276 Army ROTC cadets from universities throughout the nation.

Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was the keynote speaker for this year's seminar. Dignitaries from the U.S. Army, Department of State and other national agencies also attended the seminar.

The seminar is held in honor of General of the Army George C. Marshall, who served as an Army chief of staff as well as secretary of state and secretary of defense. Author of the Marshall Plan to reconstruct postwar Europe, he was the only career military officer to be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

The Marshall Award, presented to the top ROTC cadet at each university, recognizes the values Marshall consistently depicted: professional excellence, calm leadership, personal integrity and selfless service to the nation.

Flood disaster loans available in Wayne Co.

Governor Ben Nelson announced that 11 flood-damaged Nebraska counties have been granted a disaster declaration by President Bill Clinton. Gov. Nelson received word from the state Farmers Home Administration office that family farmers in these counties and 22 contiguous counties including Wayne County, are eligible for disaster assistance, including FmHA low-interest, emergency loans.

The 11 counties in the disaster area are Boyd, Butler, Colfax, Cuming, Dodge, Merrick, Platte, Sarpy, Saunders, Sewer and Stanton. The 22 contiguous counties include Boone, Burt, Cass, Douglas, Greeley, Hall, Hamilton, Holt, Howard, Keya Paha, Knox, Lancaster, Madison, Nance, Pierce, Polk, Rock, Saline, Thurston, Washington, Wayne and York.

"I am pleased President Clinton recognized the disaster these farmers suffered from the ice jams and flooding in March and made assistance available to them," said Governor Nelson. "The fact that he acted so quickly in granting the disaster declaration shows a sincere concern for farmers at such a crucial time of year — when producers are preparing to plant this year's crop."

Governor Nelson requested the Presidential Disaster Declaration after he and Nebraska Director of Agriculture Larry E. Sitzman sur-

UNL research shows promise for fertilizer management in corn

By Vicki Miller
IANR Science Writer

Stopping nature is impossible, but when it comes to fertilizer, slowing natural processes can benefit crops and groundwater.

Working from that premise, University of Nebraska-Lincoln researchers are exploring urea fertilizer management techniques on furrow irrigated corn. They are seeking ways to assure plants get nitrogen as they need it through the growing season and to reduce excess nitrogen that can contaminate groundwater.

"Essentially, we're trying to increase fertilizer use efficiency. Intuitively, if you do this, you save the producer money and reduce the risk of groundwater contamination," said Agronomist Jim Schepers, a U.S. Department of Agriculture Agricultural Research Service scientist at UNL. Schepers is co-leader of the Management Systems Evaluation Area (MSEA) project, a comprehensive water quality research and demonstration effort by Institute of Agricultural and Natural Resources and USDA researchers.

Studying different urea fertilizer formulations, application methods and inhibitors, scientists found ways to slow the natural biological process that converts chemical components of urea fertilizers to nitrate. Rain or irrigation water can easily wash nitrate from the root zone into groundwater.

Farmers typically use liquid formulations called UAN or granular urea. UAN stands for the fertilizer's chemical components, 50 percent urea, 25 percent ammonium and 25 percent nitrate, Schepers said.

Urea converts to ammonium within a few days of application, and nitrogen-hungry soil microorganisms quickly convert ammonium to nitrate, Schepers said.

"Our concern was that we may not want the urea component to convert over so quickly," Schepers said. "That would reduce the leachability because it won't go to nitrate as quickly."

Delaying urea's conversion to nitrate would conserve late-season nitrogen for plants, he said. "This might be an option for people who don't have a center pivot and cannot fertigate."

Exploring ways to slow urea's conversion, scientists tested large, concentrated pellets made entirely of urea. They placed pellets in the soil every eight inches shortly after planting, similar to corn plant spacing. Pellets were placed in unirrigated rows of an every-other-row furrow irrigation scheme, separating water and fertilizer to reduce leaching potential. Researchers compared the pellets' performance with granular urea and other formulations.

They found the pure pellets act as their own inhibitors, delaying conversion for several weeks. The concentrated pellets dissolve slowly and cause a marked rise in pH around them which inhibits microbes that turn ammonium to nitrate.

"The trick is synchronizing the availability or dissolving of these pellets with the time when the plant needs the nitrogen," Schepers said.

Field tests compared the amount of fertilizer recovered by plants and the percent of plant nitrogen derived from fertilizer at various stages through the growing season.

At physiological maturity, corn had used 60 percent of the nitrogen in the large concentrated pellets and 55 percent in banded granular urea, Schepers said.

In the early stages of plant growth, the granular form provided 25 percent of the crop's nitrogen compared to 19 percent with the pellets. At tasseling, the percentages of nitrogen derived from fertilizer were about the same, 64 percent with granular and 63 percent with pellets. By maturity, plants got 19 percent of their nitrogen from pellets while the granular plots provided 17 percent.

Researchers also tested pellets treated with chemical inhibitors to slow the conversion to nitrate. One inhibitor provided 2 percent better total nitrogen recovery than pellets alone while another provided 1 percent less total nitrogen recovery.

"What worked as well as anything were the pellets themselves because you don't have to include an inhibitor," Schepers said.

UNL research into the use of 100 percent urea pellets as fertilizer is already showing practical results for corn production.

The pellets are an experimental formulation by the Tennessee Valley Authority and aren't available to farmers. However, Schepers said, he thinks farmers could adapt the basic information learned from this research.

"The trick, I guess, is to adjust your fertilizer rate so you're not putting too much on and then perhaps use the inhibitors to delay nitrogen availability until you need it," he said. Inhibitors can be used with liquid UAN or granular urea, but they cost about $5 per acre.

MSEA researchers now are seeking ways to get the pellets' natural inhibitor effect with techniques more immediately practical for farmers.

"These pellets are kind of a hassle to work with," Schepers explained. "A farmer would find it much easier to use a concentrated drop of liquid urea fertilizer. It would still be concentrated."

This summer, researchers will apply a dribble of pure liquid urea every 6 or 8 inches, next to plants in unirrigated rows and cover the fertilizer with cultivation.

"This could accomplish the same thing," Schepers said. "It's a liquid instead of a pellet so it would be cheaper and easy to use, but it would have the same biological effect of inhibiting conversion to nitrate."

While most corn growers use anhydrous ammonia fertilizer, Schepers said, urea may be a good option on sandy soils where anhydrous is more likely to escape into the air during application.

This research is conducted in cooperation with IANR's Agricultural Research Division. USDA funds the MSEA project through the President's Water Quality Initiative initiated by former President George Bush.
