Building boom continues

By Tom Mullen Of The Herald

The number of building permits in Wayne increased by 33 percent according to City Planner Don Siefken who delivered his annual report to the City Council Tuesday

A total of 88 building permits issued in 1994, more than double the number issued five years ago. The number of permits resulted in 31 new residential dwelling units for Wayne, including 17 single family homes and two

The City has assessed the value of the 1994 residential improvements at $2,262,271.

But that value accounts for less than 27 percent of the total value of new construction in Wayne. Commercial and Industrial building added more than $6,000,000 in new construction to Wayne. Siefken attributed much of the credit to Wayne State College for its growth

In other business, the Council considered amending a city ordinance which would require that trees cut down from city parking, or terraces, be replaced with new trees.

Homeless numbers up, Wayne hears

The director of Nebraska's largest homeless shelter told andiences in Wayne this week that the greatest increase in the number of homeless individuals is among children.

Over 40 percent of the people who seek shelter at the Open Door Mission in Omaha every night are children, said Pastor Bob Timberlake, who talked Wednesday morning at the Wayne Rotary Club, at noon at the Wayne Senior Center and in the evening to youngsters and the public at St. Mary's Church Holy Fam-

The homeless problem is not just an issue in Omaha, Timberlake told potential supporters in Wayne. He said more than 30 percent of the homeless families his organization helps are from the rural areas of

He said rural homeless tend to gravitate to the larger cities where there might be more opportunities for services and shelter

Key reasons for the growth in the homeless population in Nebraska, which Timberlake estimated at over 18,000 included lack of affordable petition, mental illness, and drug and alcohol abuse.

But he said the number one cause for the growth in the number of homeless children and women was domestic violence and abuse.

"We live in an increasingly vio-lent society," he said and when that violence tears families apart they

He said Open Door Mission and Lydia House serve 900 meals a day in their Omaha Facilities. He said the organization receives and needs continued support from the rural areas of the state like Wayne. He said they accept clothing, food and cash donations.

He said each $5 contribution provides 24 hours of shelter and food for one homeless person. In addition to food and a warm bed, the mission and Lydia House which is the shelter for women and children, provide

School building is back to the board

By Les Mann Of the Herald

It's back to the drawing board for members of the Wayne School Board and the new citizens committee they plan to form to decide what to do about the Wayne Middle School Building needs.

Discussion about the Middle School Building and last months failed bond issue election dominated the business at Tuesday night's school board meeting.

After asking for a public apology over what he termed mistakes made in the campaign for the bond issue last month, Mark Griesch, was told any subsequent campaigns would be run differently and that the board would review his request and make a decision at a later date.

Griesch complained about the use of children in radio ads for the bond

"I think its wrong because it hap-

there were several campaign violations in the recent election and he was "out to clean it up so we don't have to go for blood."

"I think we can do better next time," he said.

Another resident who was on the agenda for building discussion was businessman Gary VanMeter who asked the board to give additional consideration to remodeling the old building as a commitment to historical preservation.

VanMeter said he was "asleep in class" last year when a committee was formed to study the building needs and make recommendations for a solution. He said he thought the district should hire another architect--"someone without an agenda for a new building,"

He said one of the possible reaissue was that they may not have felt.

Churches come together: special celebration Sunday

By Les Mann Of the Herald

The culmination of more than two years of merger discussions and a tragic church fire this past summer will come in a special church meeting this weekend

The first annual meeting of Our Saviours Lutheran Church in Wayne will be held this Sunday at Riley's Convention Center. The new church with approximately 1,200 members was formed with the consolidation of the Redeemer Lutheran and St Paul's Lutheran Churches in Wayne.

The 300-seat sanctuary and fellowship hall at St. Paul's is not adequate for what has suddenly become Wayne's largest church community, admits Rothfuss.

"The assumption always was that we were going to have to build," he said. The decision hasn't been made whether to build a new church elsewhere or add onto the existing build-

Until the building limitations are addressed, the new church will be offering its members three services on the weekends, beginning Jan. 28 when a Saturday evening worship service is added to the schedule. Some Sunday School classes have been meeting at Wayne High School and this weekend's annual meeting and church meal were scheduled for Riley's to enable more members to

Next Sunday, the installation of pastor's and church council members, which will be voted on this Sunday, will be held at Ramsey Theatre on the WSC Campus.

The 10:30 a.m. worship service this Sunday at Riley's will feature as guest speaker the Rev. Malcolm Minnich securities the New Malcolm Minnick, executive director of the ELCA's Division for Outreach. The 500 voting members of the new church will gather at Riley's after the noon meal Sunday for the elec-tions, adoption of the 1995 budget and pastoral call.

and pastoral call.

A special worship service at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday, Jan, 22, at Ramsey will be presided over by Marybeth Petersen, assistant to the bishop of the Nebraska Synod who will preach and conduct the installation of pastors and council members.

The members of other churches in Wayne and area Lutheran congregations in the area are invited to attend this celebration and the reception which will follow.

Rothfuss told the Herald that the old Redeemer Church building has been sold to the Evangelical Free Church for $1.

and present danger of students moving back and forth between the two buildings," said Middle School Principal Dick Metteer. He called the shifting of student back and forth for classes between the middle school and high school a "three and a half block hallway that is unsupervised.'

Hillier retorted that the voters told the district last month that they didn't care about that.

New school board president Phyllis Spethman, who was elected to the post to replace Hillier at the meeting, said she was hearing a call for the district to start from scratch on the building issue and to seek a survey of patrons on the issues.

Superintendent Dr. Dennis Jensen said he would return with survey proposals at the next meeting. He said the board should expect a $6,000 to $10,000 cost for a survey of all district households.

Board members were also encouraged to return to next months meeting with a list of recommended citizen committee members to readdress the building issue. Last year's committee members would also be invited to participate on the new committee it was decided. Hillier also suggested that the committee should have more representation from the rural areas

New film to be shown

Dave Roever was a young soldier in Vietnam when over 40 percent of his skin was burned off by a grenade exploding in his hand. He went blind in his right eye and deaf in his right ear.

Roever's amazing testimony about not only his physical recovery, but his emotional and spiritual healing is one of the most dramatic you may ever see or hear. Through the faithfulness of God and the loving support of his wife, Brenda, he has experienced a restoration so complete that his message has been heard around the world - a message that can bring healing for the deep emotional, mental and spiritual scars tormenting today's gener-

The 'Word' for the Week -

More on old time religion

Old time religion is needed in our land. The apostle Paul preached "repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 20:21). Why this two sided message? To be converted to Christianity, two things are essential.

First, you must recognize your sin and you must change your mind about that sin. This is repentance. Where you have disobeyed God's rules for living, you must ask His forgiveness. Second, as you turn from sin, you must turn to Christ. You must recognize the sacrifice of Christ as the only adequate payment for sin. You must trust in Jesus Christ as the One who paid the penalty due to you for your personal sing, You must cast yourself on Christ. This is faith.

If repentance and faith are sincere, they bring about a change in your life. That's what conversion is all about. It means a changed life. The Bible makes this abundantly clear. "Repent therefore and return, that your sins may be wiped away" (Acts 3:19). "Believe in the Lord Jesus and you shall be saved" (Acts 16:31). A new life emerges. "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature" (2 Corinthians 5:17). New persons experience lives of "love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self control" (Galatians 5:22-23). This is why old fashioned religion is so much needed.

Women win by 16 while men lose by 12

vomen's basketball teams earned a split from Winona State, Wednesday night in Rice Auditorium.

Mike Barry's women's team evened their season record at 6-6 with an 82-66 thumping of the Minnesota team while Greg Mc-Dermott's men's team fell to 5-6 with a 69-57 setback.

In the women's game the Wildcats opened up a 37-25 halftime lead and were virtually never threatened in the second half. WSC's quickness and fast break ability held the upper hand in the game as Winona State could not keep up.

Eleven different WSC players scored for Barry's team with Mindi Jensen and Susie Osborn leading Kostreba was also in double figures with 11 while Amy Brodersen and Liz Reeg tossed in nine apiece.

Danyel Grammar scored eight points while Deedra Haskins, Kristy Twait and Lori Zeimetz netted six each. Marla Stewart and Julie Heine rounded out the scoring with two and one points, respec-

WSC completely dominated the boards, 46-30 as Jensen hauled down a game-high 13 caroms while Brodersen notched eight rebounds from her guard position.

Brodersen and Jensen shared team honors in assists with four each while Haskins and Brodersen shared team honors in steals with four apiece. The 'Cats suffered 24 turnovers while Winona State finished with 23.

Barry's team shot 43 percent from the field, 30-70 and 21 of 32 from the foul line while the visitors were 23 of 51 from the field for 45 percent and 18 of 29 from the charity stripe.

THE WAYNE State men's team jumped out to a quick 6-2 lead as Curt Woodin and Mike Fitzner drained long 3-pointers, but the lead was short-lived as Winona State took control and led by a 31-24

The host 'Cats were out-scored 38-33 in the second half despite cutting the gap with in striking distance on a couple of occasions. The visitors nailed 12, 3-pointers in 24 attempts while WSC was just 6-24 from bonus range.

Overall, the 'Cats were 22-58 from the floor for the game for 38 percent while Winona State was 25 of 57 for 44 percent. The visitors were 7-11 from the foul line and WSC continued its hot free throw shooting with a 7-8 performance.

"It wasn't so much that Winona State's offense hurt us but our offense just didn't click," McDermott "We really haven't gotten things in sync since the Christmas

The Wayne State mentor said his team relies on the perimeter shot and when you go 6-24 from that area, you're going to be in trouble. We need to continue working on our offensive execution," McDer-

Billy Patterson paced the 'Cats with 16 points while Dan Anderson came off the bench to pour in 14, hitting six of nine shots from the field. Mike Fitzner finished with eight points and Justin Malcom sed in seven while Kyle White tallied five and Curt Woodin, three. Craig Philipp and Greg Ryan rounded out the scoring with two points each.

WSC did win the battle of the boards, 35-33 with Philipp leading the way with seven caroms while Fitzner hauled down six from his guard position. Patterson dished out three assists to lead WSC and he had a pair of steals. The 'Cats had 14 turnovers in the contest compared to 10 for Winona State.

Both the Wayne State men's and women's teams will travel to play Southwest State on Saturday in Marshall, MN. "The game at Southwest State is very important for us," McDermott said. "We need to get some momentum heading into our next six-game stretch which we expect is going to be very tough.

Southwest State will be looking for its first win of the season against 12 losses. The 'Cats are seeking everyone's help next week when they host Kearney on Monday and Briar Cliff on Wednesday.

"We need to get as many people as we can to these games to support us," McDermott said, "These two teams are our biggest rivals."

WAYNE STATE'S LIZ Reeg goes to the hoop strong desipte being fouled by a Winona State player during second half action of the 'Cats 16-point victory.

Wayne has just two home games remaining on the schedule excluding the conference tournament which is also in Wayne. The Blue Devils will host Wakefield on

THE BLUE DEVIL boys team got an emotional lift before the game even started when Joe Lutt returned to the starting lineup after missing several games due to a badly sprained foot.

"I was happy with our team's effort against a quality team like Laurel," Ruhl said. "We played hard and had chances to put ourselves in position to wis." position to win."

Wayne trailed the Bears, 11-10 after one quarter of play and the host team took a 23-18 lead into the locker room at intermission. Laurel opened up a double digit lead in the third quarter and held a 46-35 lead after the third period before Wayne out-scored Bears, 18-13 over the final eight minutes.

"We've got to get more penetration from our guards," Ruhl said.
"We have to be able to make the defense pick us up in the lane and then dish the ball off and right now, we're not doing that."

Paul Blomenkamp led the Blue Devils with 18 points while Ryan Pick tossed in 17 and Andy Witkowski, 10. Joe Lutt and Jason Carr rounded out the scoring with four points each.

Laurel was led by Cody Carstensen with 16 points while each tallied 13. Jeremy Reinoehl was also in double figures with a dozen and Tyler Erwin rounded out the scoring with five.

The Blue Devils won the battle of the boards, 26-16 with Witkowski hauling down a gamehigh, 12 caroms while Blomenkamp had six. Wayne committed 14 turnovers compared to 11 for Laurel and the Blue Devils were 5-11 from the free throw line while the Bears were 14-21.

Wayne, 2-7 will host Stanton on Friday night while the 9-0 Bears play at Creighton.

Wayne wrestlers compete hard despite lack of depth

The Wayne wrestling team lost a pair of duals this week by narrow margins. Tuesday, the Blue Devils had a make-up dual at West Point and Wayne lost a 37-33 decision and Thursday in South Sioux, the Blue Devils lost a 36-33 decision.

Wayne has lost just one dual this season on the mat. All the other losses have come because of a tack of wrestlers, forcing the Blue Devils to forfeit as many as six matches a dual.

"We will never use a lack of numbers as an excuse for losing," Wayne coach John Murtaugh said.

In West Point, the host teamscored 30 points from Wayne forfeits while the Blue Devils picked up 18 from West Point forfeits. On the mat Tyler Endicott wrestled at 119 and won by pin over Mike

Wakefield cagers sweep Walthill

The Wakefield Trojans girls and boys basketball teams swept a double-header from Walthill, Tuesday in Wakefield with Gregg Cruickshank's girls improving to 7-5 with a 49-33 victory while Brad Hoskins' boys team improved to 5-5 with a 62-49 win.

In the girls contest the Trojans jumped out to a 15-8 lead after one quarter of play and were never threatened as they opened up a 31-14 lead atthe intermission.

Balance was the key for Wakefield as nobody scored more than seven points but contributions in the scoring column came from nine different players.

Jenny Haglund and Mindy Eaton paced the winners with seven points each while Stacey Preston and Alison Benson each tallied six. Kristin Preston, Mary Torczon and Amy Hattig each chipped in five while Carly Salmon and Jamie Paulson neued four each.

IN THE BOYS contest the host team got down by 15 points in the opening quarter as Walthill took a 21-5 fead into the second stanza before Wakefield got a wake-up call and came roaring back.

The Trojans were still on the short end of a 27-18 halftime score but out-scored the visitors by a 24-5 margin in the third quarter to take a 10 point lead into the final period at 42-32.

We started playing a little better defense late in the sec-ond quarter," Hoskins said. "It wasn't until the third quarter, however, that we really started playing hard and we played lights out defense."

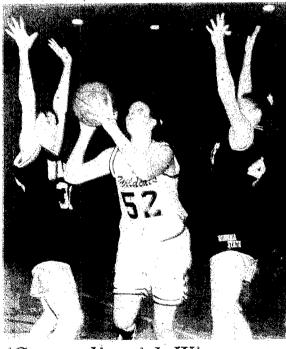

Hoskins said his team played its best defense of the season in the second half of the Walthill game. The Troians were with out the services of two starters as Cosy Brown and Matt Kucera did not suit up.

Justin Dutcher, however, picked up the slack by pouring in 26 points while Tory Nixon returned to the lineup after a brief suspension and tossed in 11, Wes Blecke tal-lied 10 and Travis Birkley scored seven while Luke Tappe and Mike Rischmueller finished with four points each.

Wakefield did lose the bat-tie of the boards, 32-29 but the Trojans committed just 13 turnovers while forcing 20. Wakefield was 7-11 from the free throw line while the visitors were a perfect 7-7.

"In our struggling first quarter we hit just two field goals in 15 attempts," Hoskins said. "We had only two rebounds and five turnovers in the first period while Walthill was 10 of 26 from the field and had 13 re-

Northrup King advances biotech corn field trials

Northrup King Co. took two significant steps this season to move experimental European corn bofer-resistant corn hybrids along in the company's new product development process. First, Northrup King expanded 1994 field trials to 37 sites under an Experimental Use Permit (EUP) granted by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). In addition, the company began seeking federal approval to plant the biotech hybrids on over 500 dealer and farmer demonstration plots in 1995.

This season's trials continued in-field research, initiated by the company in 1992, to evaluate the performance of corn plants developed through biotechnology to resist the European corn borer. The plants contain a gene from Bacillus thuringiensis, commonly known as B1, a naturally occurring soil bacterium. The gene causes the plant to produce a protein in its leaves which controls European corn borers, but is harmless to beneficial insects and other species.

"Our trials proved quite promising," said Ron Muessen, director of biotechnology research at Northrup King. "We have demonstrated that one gene can give more than adequate protection against the corn borer. In fact, it's fair to say that the gene gave plants immunity to the insects, a greater level of protection than is possible through traditional breeding."

In 1995, with EPA approval, Northrup King will conduct Bt corn field trials at more than 500 cooperating grower locations throughout the U.S. Northrup King dealers and plot cooperators at these sites will plant large acreages of European comborer-resistant corn, and will be able to harvest that corn along with their other crops for the first time.

According to Kent Schulze, president/chief executive officer of Northrup King, the company's extensive research into Bt corn will ideally provide growers with yet another tool for improving their productivity and protecting their corn yields.

"The dollars farmers receive for their commodities historically have not kept pace with rising costs," Schulze said. "As a result, farmers must continually improve productivity through sound management and new technologies.

"Northrup King developed biotech corn hybrids to provide timely, effective and economical control of European corn borers," Schulze continued. "The payoff will be more grain at harvest for growers experiencing corn borer pressure."

European corn borers are difficult to control because insecticide application is extremely time-sensitive—treatment must occur after the eggs hatch but before the larvae burrow into the stalk. Corn plants containing the B5 gene offer a highly targeted option to insecticide treatment. These plants produce a small amount of a bacterial protein in their leaves, which controls corn borers. As the larvae take their first bite of the leaf, the protein disrupts feeding and the corn borer eventually dies.

Northrup King, a Sandoz Seeds company, is a leading worldwide researcher, and North American producer and marketer of corn, soybean, alfalfa, sunflower, sorghum and other crop seed.

Japanese researchers study cornstarch at UNL

When members of the Japan Corn Starch Association (JCSA) visited the Comhusker State in 1992, they noted that research in Nebraska on finding new uses for corn was far ahead of that in Japan.

Recognizing an opportunity to increase corn sales to Japan—our number one corn export customer—the Nebraska Corn Board signed a protocol agreement with the JCSA to allow a Japanese research scientist to study state-of-the-art cornstarch processing at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Kazunori Takamine of Japan arrived in Nebraska Aug. 13, 1993, along with his wife. Kaori and their infant son. For the next 12 months, Takamine immersed himself in learning how constarch can be used to make bioplastics, ethanol and other environmentally friendly products.

"We have to develop new uses of starch for industrial material in Japan," Takamine said, "We are particularly interested in using cornstarch to make biodegradable plastics."

According to Don Hutchens, executive director of the Nebraska Corn Board, officials with the JCSA were so pleased with the project that they decided to continue it for at least another year.

While Takamine is back in Japan at the Kagoshima Prefectual Institute of Industrial Technology applying the comstarch knowledge he learned in Nebraska, Takeshi Hirata has arrived in the Cornhusker state to take his place.

Hirata, his wife Junko, and their three teenage children, are fast becoming accustomed to life in Nebraska, including attending a University of Nebraska football game at Memorial Stadium. During the next year, Hirata will continue to expand on Takamine's research using cornstanch to make biodegradable plastics and other environmentally friendly products.

"The purpose of this historic arrangement is to improve the knowledge and capabilities of Japan's starch processing industry. This in turn will provide increased opportunities for U.S. and Nebraska corn to be exported to Japan," Hutchens said.

"If agricultural starch can acquire 20 percent of the market share in Japan for products like biodegradable plastics, it would mean a demand for an additional 200 million bushels of corn."

The project is funded by the Nebraska Corn Board, the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources at UNL and the Japan Corn Starch Association.

Environmentally friendly products made from corn

Golf tees, eating utensils, cups and dishes, ballpoint pens, packing peanuts, grocery bags, disposable razors, windshield water fluid, antifreeze, lighter fluid, road deicers, and printing inks are just a few of the new environmentally friendly products that can be made from corn.

"Corn is a chemist's dream," said Rod Hassebrook of Platte Center, chairman of research for the Nebraska Corn Board. "It's starch, in particular, is an abundant, inexpensive, versatile and easily transformed source of energy."

According to Hassebrook, rapid advancements in research are allowing evenmore cornstarch to be used in plastics, up to 99 percent in some products. Much of that research is funded by corn farmers themselves.

At the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, researchers have used Nebraska com checkoff dollars to examine ways cornstarch can be used to replace the petroleum in plastics. The result: a water-resistant, environmentally friendly product made from a renewable resource. The discovery represents a potential new market for Nebraska com producers.

"Today both the U.S. economic and environmental agenda make the timing perfect for additional contributions for nontraditional corn products," Hassebrook said. "Everywhere society is demanding products and processes that are more environmentally friendly. Corn fills the bill because its components are environmentally in-

Dozens of new environmentally friendly, cornstarch-based products are going commercial. These include golf tees that disintegrate into the turf, ballpoint pens, fast-food drink lids, eating utensils, hamburger wraps, adhesives, edible coatings, and disposable-diaper backsheets.

To promote this emerging industry, Hassebrook said, the Nebraska Corn Board has distributed cornstarch-based golf tees, ballpoint pens, cutlery and packing peanuts across the state and nation.

"Response has been unbelievable," Hassebrook said: "People just can't believe that these types of products can be made from com."

He noted that the golf tees, which contain 95 percent corn, and the ballpoint pens, which contain 60 percent corn, are sold at Wal-Mart and K-Mart stores.

Unlike petroleum-based polystyrene, comstarch-based plastic begins to dissolve once it's saturated with water. The new materials can be composted and leave no toxic residue after breaking down.

"Corn farmers, through their checkoff dollars, have been a leading catalyst in discovering and nurturing new high-tech uses for corn. By investing in this type of research today, corn farmers will generate long-term markets for corn. It's also a way for us to make a contribution to the environment and to the economy, particularly in rural areas," Hassebrook said.

Nutrena will soon open a billion dollar high tech corn plant near Blair, like this one in Eddyville. Opening March 30th!

Some of the money spent by farmers on Nutrena products comes back to them in dramatic ways. When Cargill opens its newest wet corn processing plant this spring, they will initially mill 120,000 bushels of corn every day, and that demand will be supplied by farmers in and around Wayne County. The main product, corn glutenmeal will go to feeder cattle, but many other by-products will find their way across the globe in the form of corn starch, plastic, oil, alcohol and ethanol, to name a few.

Through research

Tapping treasure of corn

Anything that can be made from a barrel of oil can be made from a bushel of corn. With that bold statement and a vision for the future, Nebraska corn farmers are pushing ahead hard on all fronts to develop new non-food uses for the state's number one commodity.

Supported by Nebraska corn checkoff dollars, scientists at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln are leading the charge to develop innovative new products made from corn, according to Rod Hassebroek of Plane Center, chairman of research for the Nebraska Corn Board.

Hassebrook said biodegradable plastics, ethanol, sweeteners, road deicers, lubricants, windshield washer fluid and hundreds of other industrial products made from corn hold great promise for increasing the bottom line of Nebraska corn producers while at the same time helping the environment.

"Since its inception in 1978, we have funded more than 75 research projects valued at nearly $2.5 million at UNL." Hassebrook said. "The effort is already paying off. Industrial corn use now stands at a record 1.7 billion bushels and is projected to nearly double by 2001."

Here is a sample of research being funded at UNL by Nebraska corn farmers through the checkoff.

*Plastic is usually made from petroleum. Scientists at UNL have discovered that cornstarch can be used to replace the petroleum in plastics. The result: an environmentally friendly product made from a renewable resource.

*Genetic research to clone the "ideal" ethanol-producing organism. The process could drastically reduce the cost of making ethanol from corn.

*Ethanol is traditionally made by fermenting corn. UNL scientists are testing a revolutionary extrusion process to make ethanol. If successful, the cost of producing ethanol could be greatly reduced.

*New membrane technology is being tested to make butanol and acetone from corn. Butanol and acetone can be used as a fitel extender and in other industrial uses.

*Research is underway to develop technologies that would allow a producer who brings in a load of corn to the local elevator to have the corn instantly analyzed for its end-use qualities. If the corn was ideally suited for a specific end-use, the producer could receive a premium price for the corn.

*Related research is designed to identify the specific end-use qualities of the most commonly grown corn hybrids in Nebraska. Producers could use the information to better target the types of corn hybrids they grow for specific end uses.

All the products in this photo—from degradable plastic forks to printer's ink to road deicer—include corn. New industrial uses for corn are creating new markets for Nebraska corn producers.

New market for Nebraska corn

Because of its geographic location, Mexico has been identified by the Nebraska Corn Board as a potential key market for Nebraska corn.

According to Mike Bauerle, Corn Board member from Champion, Nebraska's location, high-quality corn, and rail system put the Cornhusker state in an ideal position to benefit from a growing market for corn in Mexico.

"The goal is to gamer a premium price for the high-quality corn we grow in Nebraska." Bauerle said. "In visiting with Mexican corn buyers, we have concluded that the market there is becoming very quality conscious. They are willing to pay for quality corn, and the good news is that we have it here in Nebraska."

The Nebraska Corn Board recently has been working on a project to determine the potential of transporting Nebraska corn directly to buyers in Mexico. Railroad cars consisting of 54 units could be loaded with corn at elevators in Nebraska, and the grain transported directly to buyers in Mexico.

Bauerle said the advantage of this system is that there would be ac commingling of cern and the grain's identity would be preserved. The payoff, increased demandand a premium for number one quality Nebraska com. Railroads and grain elevators in Nebraska have also shown interest in the project, he said.

The Mexican market, with a population of nearly 90 million, offers increased U.S. corr export apportunities following passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

Bauerle said the nine corn farmers who make up the Nebraska Corn Board decided to support MAFTA after an analysis showed the trade agreement could increase corn prices in Nebraska by as much as 9 cents a bushed.

Last year, some of the first shipments of corn from the United States to Mexico under NAFTA were made from Nebraska.

Bauerle said the shipments were significant not only because they were part of the first corn sold under the terms of NAFTA, but also because the corn was value-added-specialty corn shipped directly from Nebraska elevators to buyers in Mexico.

"Mexican buyers want high-quality corn. The good news is we have it aere in Nebraska and we are in an ideal location to transport our corn directly to those buyers. The future of the Mexican market looks very bright indeed for Nebraska corn farmers," Bauerle said.

Helping to increase demands for corn

A quarter of a cent per bushel—the current Nebraska corn checkoff—goes a long way when it's leveraged with the meources of three national organizations committed to increasing corn demand, according to Ruth Gerdes of Aubum, a member of the Nebraska Corn Board.

Gerdes said the Corn Board provides substantial funding, nearly half of its entire $2 million budget, to three national "cooperators" to increase the demand for corn. They are the U.S. Feed Grains Council, National Corn Development Foundation and U.S. Meat Export Federation.

Corn Board members also serve asdirectors and have assumed major leadership positions within these organizations. U.S. Feed Grains Council

The U.S. Feed Grains Council is a private, non-profit organization that develops and expands export markets for U.S. corn through a network of 13 international offices.

Bob Dickey of Laurel, a member of the Corn. Board, who was recently elected secretary of the Council, said increased exports are important to Nebraska farmers since about one out of every four acres of corn grown in the state is exported.

"Thanks to matching funds from USDA and other sources, every dollar of Council funding generates an average of 38 in export market expansion activity, thus increasing the effectiveness of the Nebraska corn checkoff," Dickey said.

Since 1978, Nebraska corn producers have been investing in their future through a corn checkoff program. Funds are targeted toward activities designed to build markets for Nebraska corn.

U.S. corn exports in 1993 totaled 1.3 billion bushels. China recently suspended corn exports, giving the United States the competitive edge in Southeast Asia.

According to Dickey, for every 100 million bushel increase in corn exports, the price per bushel at the farm increases from 7-17 cents.

National Corn

Development Foundation

The National Corn Development (NCDF) is responsible for investing corn checkoff funds from Nebraska and other corn checkoff states in research, market development and education programs that are designed to increase the demand for corn, according to LaMoine Smith of Minden, a member of the Nebraska Corn Board.

The programs are carried out by the National Corn Growers Association (NCGA) in contract with NCDF. NCGA has nearly 30,000 members in 47 states. The Nebraska Corn Growers Association is a state affiliate of NCGA.

Three Nebraskans serve in top leadership positions with NCDF/NCGA. Smith was recently elected NCDF president and Gerdes NCDF treasurer. Rod Gangwish, a corn farmer from Shelton, is the current president of NCGA.

The elections of Smith and Gangwish mark the first time two Nebraskans have served as presidents of NCDF and NCGA at the same time.

U.S. Meat Export Federation

The Nebraska Corn Board distributes checkoff funds to the U.S. Meat Export Federation (MEF), an international trade organization that works to develop foreign markets for U.S. beef, pork, lamb and other variety meats.

According to John McKenzie, a Com Board member from Harvard, since the livestock industry is the largest consumer of corn, it serves Nebraska corn producers well to promote meat exports.

"Every pound of beef marketed represents 7 pounds of corn consumed," McKenzie said. "Meat exports have skyrocketed in recent years and we expect the trend to continue. Meat exports are another way for corn farmers to add value to their product."

MEF carries out market development activities in more than 50 countries. As a cooperator with USDA, MEF also receives matching funds to leverage Nebraska corn checkoff money, McKenzie said.

U.S. grain-fed pork and beef exports account for nearly 140 million bushels of corn.

THE POWER OF A SINGLE KERNEL

The corn checkoff in Nebraska amounts to 1/4 of one cent per bushel. To think of it another way, that's equal to about one kernel of corn for each ear you harvest.

You'd be annated at the power that can be unleashed from that single kernel—a mugget of Nobraske's Gold. Here are just a few of the jobs that kernel is doing:

RESEARCH. • Ways corn statch can be used to replace petroleum in plastics.
• Genetic research to clone the "scheal" ethanolepide ing organism. • Testing of a revolutionary extrusion process to make ethanol. • Ways corn can be used to make butanol and accrone. • Uses of corn cornstarch can be used in some products.

INTERNATIONAL MARKETING • Nebraska checkoff dollars are used to open new markets around the world, allowing more Nebraska comiled beef to be sold in the Pacific Rim and Nebraska-brand corn in Mexico.

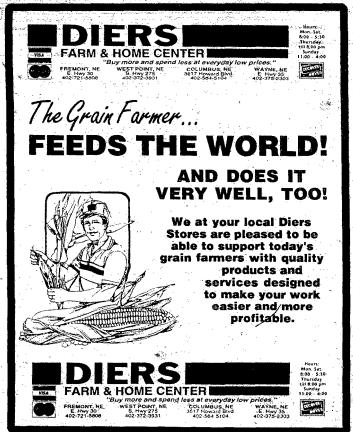

WORKING FOR A MORE PROFITABLE FUTURE

The Nebraska checkoff is our corn producers self-help program—providing the funds to stimulate demand for Nebraska corn. And it works!

Nebraska Corn Checkoff

A 'Self Help Program'

The first farmer visionaries of Nebraska's corn checkoff knew they could not rely entirely on others to help promote and market their product, according to Lee Klein, a corn farmer from Battle Creek and chairman of the Nebraska Com Board.

That's why in 1978, at the urging of corn farmers, the Nebraska Legislature passed the Corn Resources Act, Klein said. The act set up the corn checkoff program and created the nine-member Corn Board to administer the checkoff funds.

"The checkoff is our self-help program, providing the funds to stimulate the demand for our corn, and it's working," Klein said. "The checkoff is a way for producers to show some participation in promoting their own product."

Currently one-fourth of a cent per bushel, funds generated by the Nebraska corn checkoff are used to enhance the profitability of corn producers through programs of market development, research, promotion and education. The 1994-95 fiscal year budget for the Corn Board is approximately $2 million.

While the money collected through Nebraska's corn checkoff is relatively small, Klein said, it is magnified through the national and global efforts of other state checkoffs and cooperating agencies, such as the U.S. Feed Grains Council and the National Corn Growers Association.

"I look at the checkoff as simply an effort by farmers to help themselves. I don't know of any other way I could do a better job of promoting my product than through the checkoff." Klein said.

Like many promotional efforts, it isn't always easy to measure the success of the checkoff. Some producers ask, "If you're doing so much good with my checkoff dollars, then how come the price for comhasn't gone up?"

In response, Klein said, "Where would prices be without the work of the corn checkoff? The amount taken out for the checkoff is so small. Compared to the marketing budgets of most private corporations, the percentage we contribute to market our own product is minuscule. McDonald's, for instance, spends hundreds of millions of dollars each year on promotion. I think farmers are getting a real bargain."

Klein said the corn checkoff has increased markets for Nebraska corn in the United States and around the world, citing ethanol, sweeteners, biodegradable plastics, relaxed trade barriers in Japan and elsewhere, and passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement as examples.

A major focus of the Nebraska Corn Board is aimed at finding new industrial uses for the state's most abundant commodity. The effort is already paying off, Klein said. Industrial corn use now stands at a record 1.6 billion bushels and is projected to nearly double by 2001.

"Technology allows us to increase corn production by about two bushels per acre per year," Klein said. "We realize we can't feed and eat our way out of our growing capacity to produce, so the focus now is on new industrial uses for our product."

Biodegradable plastics, ethanol, sweeteners, road deicers, lubricants, windshield washer fluid and hundreds of other industrial products made from corn hold great promise for increasing the bottom line of Nebraska corn producers while at the same time helping the environment, he said.

"While we may not always be successful, the growth and diversity of Nebraska's corn production have consistently moved forward with the help of the farmer-controlled checkoff. When I pay the checkoff, I look upon it as an investment in the future to meet the changing marketplace of the 21st century," Klein said,

Specialty corns listed

Growing corn for specific end uses is gaining in popularity in Nebraska. This "designer" corn is usually grown on contract and may require different agronomic conditions than the typical yellow dent corn raised in Nebraska. The following list of specialty corns and their end uses is provided by the Nebraska Corn Board.

Waxy Corn

Called waxy corn for its appearance, the starch in this corn is ideal for a variety of special needs. It is used for thickening foods, cherry pie filling, for example, and for bonding in paper and other applications.

High Amylose Corn

High amylose corn has properties similar to waxy corn. It is used primarily for specialty starch needs, such as quick-setting confectionery gums (jelly beans), and in certain glues.

White Corn

Typically used for food, examples include tortillas, corn chips and other snack foods. Nebraska is one of the leading white corn producing states in the nation.

Known for its thick, hard endosperm, flint kernels are smooth and rounded with no denting. Flint corn is excellent for breakfast cereals and some snack foods. Only a small amount of flint corn is grown in the United States.

High-Oil Corn

As the name implies, high-oil corn contains in some cases up to 150 percent increased oil concentration. Used for livestock feed because of its high protein content, high-oil corn also holds promise in industrial applications, such as lubricants. Improved High-Lysine Corn

Ideal for fivestock because of its excellent nutritional value. Lysine, an essential amino acid, is low in normal yellow corn. High-Starch Corn

Although limited hybrids are currently available, high-starch corn would be a boon for industrial applications such as ethanol and biodegradable plastics.

'Designer' corn promising market for Nebraska farmers

Most of the corn grown in Nebraska is dent corn with a yellow endosperm. However, specialty corn, designed for specific end uses, is growing in popularity.

"Designer com" containing high concentrations of starch, oil, amino acids and other essential chemicals holds great promise for revolutionizing the corn industry, according to Christine Bankson, a corn farmer from Hordville and member of the Nebraska Corn Board.

"Specialty corn is a promising market for Nebraska corn farmers," Bankson said. "We already have producers in the state who are growing white corn for food use, high-oil corn for industrial purposes, and high-starch corn for use in plastics."

While it is difficult to determine exactly how much specialty corn is being grown in the state, Bankson said, Nebraska has become a leader in the production of white, waxy, high-oil and other specialty corns.

"Many of the specialty corns are grown on contract for a premium, Producers need to be aware that some specialty corn may not yield as much as regular field corn and may require different agronomic conditions and separate storage and handling," she said.

Some corn industry experts predict corn farmers will no longer be producing just corn in the future. Instead, they will be starch producers, or protein producers, even oil producers.

Bankson said the Nebraska Corn Board

Most of the corn grown in Nebraska is dent corn with yellow endosperm. However, research is indicating that "designer corn" with specific properties may create new markets.

is attempting to stay at the forefront of this emerging new market by funding research aimed at identifying the chemical and physical properties in a kernel of corn. The research is also designed to develop a system for quickly and easily identifying those properties.

"The ultimate goal of this specialty com research is to allow producers to better target the types of corn hybrids they grow for specific end uses, and to make corn growing more profitable in the state." Bankson said.

Nebraska's strength is corn and cattle

Livestock production continues to be the largest consumer of Nebraska corn, consuming some 45 percent of the state's corn crop. Together, these two products make up nearly 75 percent of all Nebraska farm cash receipts.

The Nebraska Corn Board actively promotes the livestock industry through a variety of programs, including research, feeding trials, advertisements, brochures and foreign marketing.

The Corn Board recently funded corn gluten feeding trials through the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Corn gluten is a byproduct of the ethanol production process and offers a lower cost alternative to whole grain feed. The purpose of the research is to assure cattle feeders that efficiency, quality and digestive response are not compromised when using gluten feeds.

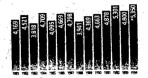

One of the best — and most profitable — ways of exporting Nebraska com is in the value-added form of red meat, according to Don Hutchens, executive director of the Nebraska Com Board.

"That's because every pound of meat exported represents the equivalent of seven pounds of corn exported," Hutchens said.

The Corn Board distributes checkoff funds to the U.S. Meat Export Federation (MEF), an international trade organization that works to develop foreign markets for U.S. beef and pork.

According to MEF, U.S. grain-fed pork and beef exports account for nearly 140 million bushels of corn. U.S. beef exports add $70 per head to the value of fed cattle and $6.15 per head to the value of market hogs.

U.S. Animal Feed Trends (Millions of Bushels) Source USDA/World Agricultural Outlook Board

The Nebraska Corn Board recently teamed up with MEF, the Nebraska Becf Council and the Nebraska Department of Agriculture to fund market research on Nebraska beef exports to Israel. As a result of the research, Hutchens noted, the first shipments of corn-fed Nebraska beef to Israel were made last year, with the prospect of even greater sales in the future.

The Corn Board is also using checkoff dollars to fund a program by the Nebraska Department of Agriculture to promote Nebraska-brand beef across the United States. The program encourages restaurant goers and grocery shoppers to "Savor the Good Life" by eating com-fed Nebraska beef.

Determining corn price

By Dr. Roy Frederick UNL Professor of Agricultural Economics

In many ways, corn is synonymous with Nebraska agriculture. Year after year, corn leads all other crops in acres planted, harvested and total cash value. Corn is also a vital input to the state's cattle feeding industry and is responsible for much of Nebraska's agribusiness sector.

In simplest terms, corn prices are determined by how much corn is available and how fast it's being used. The actual mechanics of price determination have both future and current dimensions, and both change frequently as new information becomes available.

From the futures price, a cash price is established for local markets. Inflation has a subtle impact on prices over time, but it is largely immeasurable within a market year or even over several years. The market simply "knows" that $2 per bushel is a low price now, whereas 20 years ago, $1 was a low price.

Supply Thanks

Thanks to productive research in the public and private sectors, corn yields have been increasing by an average of nearly 2 percent per year. The opportunity is to increase profitability in Nebraska agriculture as corn yields trend higher. The challenge is to expand markets as production grows to assure profitable prices.

There's no denying that total production affects prices. Nationally, the average market price for the 1983 crop was $3.25 per bushel. For the 1992 crop, it was $2.07. Demand

The price spread between low production years and high production years would have been even greater without a consistent effort to expand corn utilization.

Domestic livestock feeding is the largest and most traditional of the market segments for corn. Feed usage tends to be positively associated with annual corn supplies and inversely associated with comprices. Not surprisingly, in the last 15 years, the smallest amount of corn was fed from the 1983 crop (3.8 billion bushels) and the largest from 1992 (5.2 billion bushels).

U.S. com exports have been more erratic and less positive than domestic feeding trends. Increased competition from the European Community, China, and other countries, as well as worldwide economic conditions, have combined to hust U.S. corn exports.

The most consistent grown for comproducts has been in the food and industrial products segment. In 1978, this market totaled 621 million bushels. By 2000, this market may reach 2.5 billion bushels. Had this segment not been growing, it is likely that corn prices would have averaged 15-20 cents lower in recent years.

Corn is no different than any other product that competes in the marketplace: those who have a product to sell must do everything possible to expand the market.

Nebraska becoming leader in ethanol production

Nebraska, one of the first states in the nation to experiment with and promote the use of corn-based ethanol, is fast becoming a leader in ethanol production.

Hastings, Columbus, Blair, Sutherland, York and Aurora are home to or soon will be home to Nebraska ethanol plants. The expanded ethanol production means higher corn prices, value-added jobs, and a boost to local economies, according to Mark DeVore, a Grand Island corn farmer who serves as chairman of the Nebraska Corn Board's market development committee.

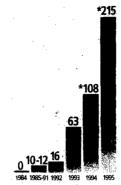

"Since 1978, the Corn Board has been at the forefront in the promotion of ethanol," DeVore said. "Our efforts are starting to pay off. As more and more ethanol plants locate and expand in Nebraska, corn producers will have another stable market for their product."

In the past five years alone, ethanol production in the state has grown from 12 million gallons per year to more than 250 million gallons annually as new plants come on line.

Chief Ethanol in Hastings, Nebraska's first ethanol plant, produces 28 million gallons of ethanol annually.

Recent expansion will allow Minnesota Corn Processors to produce more than 70 million gallons of ethanol annually at its Columbus plant.

At Blair, Cargill's new_corn wetmilling plant will produce more than 80 million gallons of ethanol when completed later this year.

Annual Ethanol Production in Nebraska: 1984-1995 (Millions of Gallons) New ethanol plants and expanded facilities have helped Nebraska become a net exporter of ethanol Source Nebraska Ethanol Board

*Projected

The Nebraska Nutrients plant at Sutherland has a capacity of 15 million gallons of ethanol.

The High Plains ethanol plant at York will produce more than 40 million gallons while an ethanol plant under construction at Aurora is expected to produce 25 million gallons of the corn-based fuel.

Meanwhile, Quadrex Corp. of St. Louis has announced plans to build ethanol plants in Kearney, Sutton and Central City. The company said each plant could produce 25 million gallons of ethanol annually

When all is said and done, the total corn grind at these plants will exceed 100 million bushels, according to DeVore. That's nearly 10 percent of Nebraska's total annual corn production.

"Nebraska's ethanol industry is undergoing rapid expansion, creating a market for one out of every 10 bushels of corn grown in the state and raising comprices by as much as 25 cents a bushel in local areas," DeVore said. "These ethanol plants also provide stable employment and increased economic activity in the communities in which they are located."

Nationally, 1.3 billion gallons of ethanol are produced annually, creating a market for nearly 500 million bushels of com.

Ethanol is not a new fuel source. Both pure ethanol gasolines and ethanol-blended gasolines were used on a limited basis for automobites in the United States from the early 1900s to the 1930s. The use of ethanol, a renewable, home-grown energy source, enjoyed a assurgence in the 1970s as a result of oil shortages.

Today, ethanol is promoted for its ability to reduce carbon monoxide emissions by up to 25 percent and for its high octane content. In addition, ETBE, an ethanol-derived ether, will help to meet new clean air standards.

In recent years, the Nebraska Corn

Board has spent a considerable amount of time and effort working to ensure that ethanol plays a significant role in the new reformulated gasoline market under the 1990 Clean Air Act.

The Corn Board is also leasing a 1993 Chevy Lumina that can run on any mixture of gasoline and up to 85 percent ethanol. The revolutionary factory-built vehicle is available for display at public events and other community activities in Nebraska. Contact the Nebraska Corn Board for more information.

New clear air legislation has dramatically changed both the marketing and potential for ethanol — a clean-burning fuel made from cora.
