Wayne residents wishing to park on the area between the street and the sidewalk may be required to pave that area under a proposal being debated by the city-eouncil.

Council members listened to debate and then voted to defer any decision on the proposed profinance until its next meeting.

IN OTHER action, the council voted to change carriers for both health and life insurance for city employees

Woodman Insurance is currently providing both coverages. However, Blue Cross/Blue Shield Preferred Provider Plan will provide health coverage at a lower cost.

Life insurance will be provided by the Fortis Company of Northeast Nebraska Insurance. Switching to this company will result in a savings of approximately $1,800 to the city which provides the coverage to its employees.

The council rejected the only bid that was submitted for the sidewalk improvement project

Double R awards given at Winside

After two years of giving the Winside elementary school R&R (Respect and Responsibility) Awards, the program is being viewed by most teachers as a hig success.

The kids can hardly wait for the end of each nine weeks to roll around," said third grade teacher Marilyn Leighton. "The boys are even more excited than the girls. They're always asking 'Am I going to get an R&R this time?' I have one little girl who has never had one but she really keeps trying."

"The program was started by the teachers and administration as a way to reward the students who are always polite and respectful but may not excel academically. We also hope this is a way to motivate those less respectful and polite-to do better," said first gråde teacher Eliene Jager.

How the program works is each teacher keeps a sheet with all their students' names on it. The students are observed not just by their classroom teacher but by the other teachers, school staff which includes bus drivers, custodians, lunchroom personnel and secretaries. The main guidelines that they are observed on are:

Be Kind - Share and take turns, report, but do not tattle, do not tell others they can't play, do not tease others, do not bother right day, take care of school prop-

y. This is not a complete list, but it is a list each child took home to help them know what kinds of behavior shows respect and responsibility.

"We try to tell the children right away if they are doing something wrong," said both teachers. "However, if it's at the beginning of the nine weeks, we don't tell them they definitely won't be getting an R&R because then they would just give up and wouldn't care what they say or do the rest of the time."

"I usually say 'this might count against your R&R Award," said Ms. Jager. "I don't feel not getting an R&R has hurt their self esteem, I always try to talk to them after the awards are presented and encourage them to keep trying. I tell them what is documented that they did wrong." Mrs. Leighton also has a pep talk after the presentation to try and encourage her students.

The teachers agreed they haven't had a lot of feedback from parents about the program, however, the few that have commented were positive about it. They also feel that the guidelines the children are observed on are standard expectations in all elementary programs as spect and Responsibility on it. The shirts were a donation from the Winside Education Association. We hope to make this t-shirt an annual event," said Ms. Jager. "We had 55 students receive them this year, our goal for the future is 100%

– Editorials -Freedom of speech being eroded?

One does not always appreciate something until it is gone. Uncle Sam has control over communication systems such as radio, telephone and television. Now that the Internet is used by countless users to chat, observe, comment, conduct business, and be entertained, Sam is making every effort to gain control over this rapidly growing method of communicating.

Government's first major thrust to gain control over the Net was the Exon legislation, now on trial in a federal court, which would supposedly "protect the children from pornography". Why didn't the government first try to control "porn" at the movie theater, video rentals and on television? Far more children are exposed to those processes of entertainment than are those reading online.

With government's first effort at controlling the Net challenged in a federal lawsuit, a second push is underway also wearing camouflage.

Under a White House draft proposal last week, Internet users would be asked to give the government the digital "keys" to their computers in exchange for more security when doing business online. The plan calls for the development of an encryption system that would let people transact business online without worrying about someone stealing their credit card number or otherwise invading their privacy

In return, however, the povernment wants to invade one's privacy by having sole possession of the encryption "keys" that are necessary to decipher the code, making it possible for government to enter by the back door and read all data. Is this the American way?

In other words, if you and your friends are exchanging e-mail or business information, and you use programs that "encrypt" (turns messages into unreadable code later deciphered by the recipient) the messages: Uncle Sam wants the "keys" so he too can read the data. Is this good where "freedom of speech" differentiates us from other societies? We think not. Some Internet users believe Sam's main interest in controlling this last bastion of speech freedom is in preparation for total control and taxing the Net's use.

The freedom of speech, uncensored by government, must prevail in order to "protect the children" from Big Brother's snooping

Capitol News — Entities to look into consolidating

By Melvin Paul Statehouse Correspondent The Nebraska Press Association

Growing up on a farm in North-east Nebraska, I remember watching the maintainer man slowly rumble by in his massive, yellow grader.

Boy was that impressive to a 3ycar-old.

The huge machine scraped away the washboarded ruts in the gravel road and left a smooth surface behind. We used to race out to the county road on our bicycles to see who could put the first tracks on the flattened road.

But, thanks to the clamor over high property taxes and the package of bills passed by the state Legislature this spring, the maintainer man may become a thing of the past. That package of bills provides more than a couple of incentives for counties, cities, schools and town ships to cooperate, merge depart ments and consolidate services.

Instead of being hired by the local township board (which have disappeared in most counties already), the maintainer man may be a county or city employee, working the country roads along with those in the nearby towns

Merging road-maintenance func tions now handled by townships, counties and cities is just one of the ideas being kicked around the Cornhusker State to save money in hopes of living under the spending and taxing lids passed by state senators this spring

Many small towns have already stopped hiring their own town marshall and are now contracting with the county to have a deputy patrol their streets

And county-wide dispatching of ambulances, fire trucks and police is being done in many areas

Memorial Day rememberance Members of the auxiliaries of Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion and Disabled

American Veterans held flags during an indoor ceremony on Memorial Day. The wet, dreary weather prohibited the ceremony from being held outdoors, but a number of people were on hand to hear the Memorial Day message delivered by Pastor Bill Koe-ber, a recitation of "In Flanders Field" by Girls Stater Jolene Jager and the reading of the Roll of Honor.

Expect more of that in the fu ture

Other ideas that are being kicked around:

In central Nebraska, the cities of Stromsburg; Shelby, Gresham and Polk are talking about sharing utility workers and jointly purchasing supplies and equipment.

- In'southwest Nebraska, officials from seven communities met in Oxford to discuss ways to save money by working together.

One councilman got straight to the point: both Oxford and Beaver City had recently spent $80,000 each to buy new garbage trucks. Why in the world did they do that, he asked, when each truck is used only 1-1/2 days a week?

- In the Panhandle, the cities of Scottsbluff and Gering, along with the local school districts and Scotts Bluff County officials got together to talk about cooperation

This is an area ripe for consolidation. It's hard to tell where Scottsbluff ends and Gering begins, and I've never figured out exactly where Terrytown is located. Maps show it somewhere between both; cities

The Panhandle folks talked about creating a self-insurance program for employees of all the local government units, thus reducing the cost for taxpayers and providing better insurance for employees, and buying equipment together.

This kind of stuff has always been a pet peeve of mine, How come, for instance, do towns need at city library as well as one at the local school? Wouldn't one library be enough and wouldn't it be a bigger, better one?

In Lincoln, someone smartly realized that it made perfect sense to build recreation centers that could be used by schoolehildren during the day and the general public at night.

In Gage County, there are 23 township road graders sprinkled across the county. Are that many really needed?

A warning: local voters will make the decisions on whether local government antities will merge to save money or be allowed to spend more tax dollars by exceeding the lids

So folks, it's up to us. If we want good_services at less cost through confolidation and cooperation, we'd better speak up or keep on writing the checks.

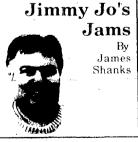

The views expressed in Capitol-News are those of the writer and not. necessarily those of the Nebraska Press Association.

Whose newspaper is it, anyway?

Everybody has their own idea as to what should go in their community newspaper. This isn't exactly a new revelation

Every week it seems I hear frompeople because they didn't see their daughter's graduation write-up in the paper or they didn't get to read Aunt Bessie had coffee with Uncle Earl. My reaction to this is simple. Sometimes you just have to wait a week or two. The object here at the Wayne Herald is to get as much local news into the newspaper as possible. It might mean that the bowling scores are on a community page at times. It might mean that an obituary isn't with all the rest of them. That's just how the ball tends to roll. Sometimes I hear. "You can't put my story in, but you can put in two pages of gossip news every week, why are they so important?" But guess what else I hear when we have to edit some gossip news for the week. "The gossip news is the only reason I buy the Wayne Herald?" Like I said, everyone has their own idea of what their hometown newspaper should contain. I understand that everyone feels that there news is important and we try to treat everyone like it is, but sometimes, we are not as successful as we should be. You see, the paper is a giant puzzle that has a new shape and size each week. When we start to build the paper, we have a basic idea of what it will look like, how many pages it will be and what it will contain. As the puzzle nears completion, new pieces of the puzzle need to be made to finish the project. In the end, sometimes the news just doesn't get in or isn't able pages. A rule in the newspaper business is the paper should be at least 40-50 percent advertising to break even. As you can see, we fail to make that percentage frequently, because you the reader want more news. We constantly strive to get every piece of local news we can to fit in that week's paper. I know that sometimes it doesn't happen, but we do our best to keep that information for the next issue or two.

to fit on their specific page, but we really do try our best to fit all the weekly news into our pages.

Another complaint I hear weekly a "Why aren't the junior high sports stories in the paper?" Mostly because we try to cover the area high school sports closer, and with five different schools with several different sports, the pages get filled up in a hurry. Korey is on the run daily to football, track meets, baseball and softball games. We consider varsity sports a priority in the Herald. That doesn't mean that B or C squad activities are unimportant. We are more than happy to collect any news item that pertains to their activities, but it may get bumped from time to time, because of the overflow of varsity activities that week. But we still have it and we try our best to get it in as soon as possible.

The cost of newsprint has risen dramatically, because of this inflation, we must cut the cost of printing which sometimes means we aren't able to print more than 16

Check the chips in 2001

A miniature chip, interjected by needle into the body, to send and receive radio messages, will likely hit the market around 2001.

Futurists believe the ID locators will be hot sellers for people desiring convenience and protection.

What will attract people to the chips? Advertising will explain how one can shop without carrying cash by being able to control an electronic banking account from any geographical location.

Shopping, buying and selling, particularly on the Internet will be handled conveniently with such a chip Military usage will first popularize the chip as it will permit tracking personnel using the GPS (Global Positioning System) already in use. Organizations such as the FBI, CIA, NSA, and sall law enforcement agencies, will find the tiny chip a godsend for tracking particular individuals.

Animal owners, many already using the tiny pet processor, will welcome the advantages of tracking pets, livestock, zoo inventories, and returning lost dogs and cats to owners.

currently using electronic monitors on offenders who, as a part of their probation/parole terms, are required to remain at home. Such monitors are of considerable size, compared to the small ID, implant. Such monitors are worn outside the body which opens the possibility of being tampered with.

New vehicles, including farm machinery and water craft can be equipped with GPS gadgets that give users their location.

Implanted ID sensors also might be used for monitoring a person's health, or warning of a biological malfunction.

Members of Roy Reed Post 252 who received certificates and pins as 50 year members are Marvin Anderson, Bill Hoffman and Howard Voss.

Winside Legion Post holds Memorial Day services

Roy Reed Post 252 American egion of Winside held a Memorial Day program on May 27 in the village auditorium at 10:30 a.m. The post color guard advanced the colors, followed by a flag salute during the playing of the National Anthem. Orville Lage, post chaplain, gave invocation.

Robert Wittler, Boys Stater, thanked the Legion for the opportunity to represent them. He read the "Gettysburg Address." Rachel Riley, Girls Stater, also thanked the Legion and read the Decoration of Independence.

Wayne Denklau, Veteran Administrator and Legion member, read the roster of deceased veterans. The Winside high school band, with 26 members present and directed by Kevin Koopmann, played "America The Beautiful."

Guest speaker was Ron Benke from the Norfolk Legion Post, who spoke on the real meaning of Memorial Day. He also complimented the large number of Winside residents present for coming out on such a rainy day instead of doing as many others do and go camping or just stay home.

Goodwill drive slated for June

Mr. Denklau and Post Commander Dan Jaeger presented three Post members certificates and pins for 50 years of continuous membership in the post. They were Marvin Andersen, Bill Hoffman and Howard Voss. The same presentation was made to Darlene Eckert privately in memory of recently deceased husband Julius Eckert, who would also have reached his 50 year membership.

Following the chaplain's benediction and the retiring of the colors, a brief ceremony was held at Pleasantview Cemetery. This was the first time in 14 years that the avenue of flags was not flown, due to the weather.

A dinner for the public was served afterwards at the Post home.

Another attraction for having a chip implanted in the forehead or hand is it would enable police, fire, and ambulance dispatchers to find people who dial 911 from wireless phones. At present many of the 911 emergency calls made in the US come from wireless phones, and half the time the callers don't know their location, posing major problems for emergency personnel. Parents will be encouraged to have chipped children" so as to know their whereabouts.

With an ID implant, there is no concern about credit cards, Social Security numbers, or checks being stolen, as the chip replaces them. Governments will save billions not having to print currency or have it counterfeited.

Older folk may recoil at the notion of "gizmo money", but youths will probably like the idea. In the last generation there has been a radical change about wearing tattoos and body rings. Some employers now require staff to wear pagers Someday, they may require chips. Welcome 2001

Summer camp guidelines children begin to feel uneasy about Summer camp is more than a country vacation for kids. It is a time for children to build an appreciation of the outdoors and to develop social skills, cooperation and self-reliance, qualities that will stay with them throughout their childhood and into their adult lives.

Camp also serves as a refuge where kids can escape the pressures of home. It fees them, gets their creative juices flowing and renews their sense of being kids.

To ensure a child's time at summer camp is as rewarding as it can be, keep the following things in mind:

1) Remember that camp is a learning experience. Summer camp offers a wonderful opportunity for parents and their children to become more emotionally independent. Learning to "let go" allows children to develop autonomy and a stronger sense of self. It also gives parents a chance to tend to their own needs and to become reacquainted with their spouses.

2) Prepare for camp together Depending upon the child's level of maturity, let him or her have input in camp decisions, such as where to go and what to pack. When children feel part of the decision-making process, they are more likely to have a good experience.

3) Talk about fears or concerns. As summer camp approaches, many

First time donors were Kathryn Eichenberg, George Eichenberg, come up (and be resolved), are part of the educational experience of summer camp. These experiences provide opportunities to develop social skills, sensitivity and selfawareness, while enjoying the outdoors and having fun. A day camp at Ponca State Park will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, June 25 and 26 for 4-H'ers and their friends in Dakota, Dixon, Thurston, Wayne and Cedar counties. Youth must be born between January 1982 and Dec. 31, 1987 to be eligible to attend. Activities are scheduled from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. each day. Noon meal and snacks are provided. Camp fee is $13. For more information, or to register, contact your local extension office.

Q: Is it possible to create a spoiled brat by telling him his every move is wonderful? A: Yes, inflationary praise is unnecessary. A child quickly catches on to your verbal game, and your words then lose their meaning.

It is helpful to distinguish between the concepts of flattery versus praise, Flattery is unearned. It is what-Grandma says when she comes for a visit: "Oh, look at my beautiful little girl! You're getting prettier each day." Or, "My, what a smart boy you are!" Flattery occurs when you heap compliments upon the child for something he did not achieve. Praise, on the other hand, is used to reinforce positive, constructive behavior. It should be highly specific rather than general. "You've been a good boy ... " is unsatisfactory. "I like the way you've been keeping your room straight" is better. Parents should always watch for opportunities to offer genuine, well-deserved praise to their children, while avoiding empty flattery

Q: My 8-year-old often puts his milk glass too close to his elbow when eating, and he has knocked it over at least six times. Yesterday when he spilled the milk, I became very angry. Should I have reacted more patiently?

A: Yes, it appears that you overreacted. It would have been better to create a method of capturing his attention and helping him remember to return his glass to a safe area.

For example, you could have cut an "off limits" zone from red con-struction paper and taped it to the side of his plate. If Junior placed his glass on the paper, he would have to help wash dishes after the evening meal: I guarantee you that he would seldom "forget" again.

In fact, this procedure would probably sensitize him to the location of the glass even after the paper was removed. It's important to remember that irresponsible behavior is quite different in motive than defiance and rebellion, and thus it should be handled more creatively babit?

A: It is a well-established fact that unreinforced behavior will eventually disappear. This process, called extinction by psychologists, can be very useful to parents and teachers who want to alter the characteristics of children.

The animal world provides many interesting examples of extinction Consider the process by which circus elephants are taught not to throw their mighty power against the restraining chain each evening. When an elephant is young, his foot is chained to a cement block that is totally immovable. He will pull repeatedly against the barrier without success thereby extinguishing his escape behavior. Later, a small rope and fragile stake will be sufficient to restrain the powerful elephant.

In order to eliminate an undesirable behavior, one must identify and then withhold the critical reinforcement. Let's apply this principle to the matter of whining, which you mentioned."

Why does your child whine instead of speaking in a normal voice? Because you have inadvertently reinforced her whining! As long as she is speaking in her usual voice you are too busy to listen to her. She may babble all day, so you have probably tuned out most of her verbiage. But when she speaks in a grating, irritating, obnoxious tone, you turn to see what is wrong. Her whining brings results; her normal voice doesn't, so she becomes a whiner

In order to extinguish the whining, you must reverse the reinforcement. You should begin by saying, "i can't hear you because you're whining." After this message has been passed along for a day or two, you should show no indication of having heard a moan-tone, but you should offer immediate attention to requests made in a normal voice. If this control of reinforcement is applied property, I guarantee it will achieve the desired results.

Q. Often times I cut out the tags sewn in my clothes. My friend says not to do this - why?

Care labels are very important A. Care tables are very important. Manufacturers are legally required to attach a proper cleaning method for any textile garment or article of clothing used to cover or protect the body. The consumer of consumer or professional cleaner is responsible for following the instructions. When you cut out the label, the person cleaning the garment can not be sure of the manufacturer's recommended cleaning method. If the labels are bothersome, take them off and have them sewn in a different place.

Successful relation styles

Marriages that emphasize comnunication and compromise have long been held up as the ideal. Yet, research rejects the notion that there is only one type of successful marriage. In fact, there are three different styles that are quite stable. The closer a marriage comes to settling into one of these three adaptations, the better its chances for permaiency.

One important way to identify what type of marriage a couple has is by how they fight. Although there are other dimensions that are telling about a union, the intensity of argument seems to bring out a marriage's true cofors. There are three types of stable marriages based on their style of combat: validating, volatile or avoidant

Here are some guiding principals

Mr. and Mrs. Creamer Open house to honor Creamers

The family of Duane and Verna Mae Creamer is planning an Open House Sunday, June 9 in honor of the couple's 50th wedding anniversary. The event will be from 2-4 p.m. at the First United Methodist Felowship Hall in Wayne.

The couple's family includes four children, Warren and Eunice Creamer, Gregory Creamer and Diane Creamer, all of Wayne and David Creamer of Blair. They also have three granddaughters, Lisa and Laura Creamer of Allen and Amy Togetherness vs. Separateness. If you strongly value we-ness" more than your separateness and individuality, then you probably would be more comfortable with a validating style. If you feel your own autonomy and separateness are more important, you may prefer a volatile or avoidant style; couples in these marriages, for example, are more likely to have separate spaces in their homes that are, purely his or hers, have separate friends, etc.

Romance and companion. ship. If you highly value keeping your relationship dynamic and romantic, a volatile style may suite you. Validating couples are most concerned about being good companions and each other's best friend. Honest. Bold frankness is a hallmark of volatile couples, who generally value being completely honest with each other, and don't believe in hiding negative feelings or their grievances on issues. They see honesty as the basis of their trust. Validating and avoidant couples, on the other hand, pick and choose when and on what issues they will be completely honest, and often underplay their expressions of negativity

Persuasion. Volatile couples feel that their partner is not really engaged with them if there is not a really involved give-and-take and an active discussion of disagreements. Validating and avoidant couples value this kind of involvement far less.

Expressing emotion. If you are very expressive emotionally, and prefer that in discussing marital conflicts, then the volatile style suits you. If you are expressive, but in moderation, then the validating style is more likely your preference: And if you don't feel very comfortable with expressing strong negative feelings, you would probably prefer an avoiding style.

Traditional roles. Validating and avoidant couples tend to prefer traditional sex roles in dividing up household tasks and child care

Philosophy, and beliefs, Those in avoid it marriages are more likely that the other two styles to put a high value on having a shared set of religious or philosophical beliefs that guide their life together.

All couples must maintain a balance between positive and negative interaction. The magic ratio is 5 to 1. In the words, as long as there is five times as much positive feeling and interaction between husband and wife as there is negative, the marriage was likely to be stable. One way to think of a stable couple is as a stereo system in which five times as much power is emitted from the positive loudspeaker as from the negative one No matter what the particular couple's volume level, the balance between their positive and negative speakers remains roughly the same. Memorial weekend was soggy, gloomy

The poppies and peonies are right on time here. But what a soggy, gloomy holiday weekend. I was amazed to see a bunch of campers and RVs at the local KOA campground. They have to be much more enthusiastic campers than J am. Heavens, I was complaining about the extra-firm mattress at the Super 8 in York last night.

Once again, it was time for our high school alumni banquet. And we were one of the honored classes: forty years. Out of a class of 14, one died 23 years ago, of leukemia. His widow and 11 others, were there last night. Plus, one of our favorite instructors joined us.

And, after photos, and conversation, and good food, we all gathered to wrap it up with reminiscing.

Mr. Mawer came to Waco at age 23, as a new graduate just out of the military. He's from Genoa, Neb., originally, but had been stationed in Scattle. The Korean war was over; he could leave early if he had a job. Teacher placement said there was a job at Waco; he said he'd take it, not even knowing where it was. He had to stop in Seward to ask directions. And, when he drove down Main Street in the fall of 1954, he saw four hitching posts! It's really a wonder he stayed. He finished his career as superintendent of Grand Island schools.

Joyce, who had not been at any class reunion since graduation, was the most organized. She came prepared with memorabilia, like the program from our district music contest and the schedule for pep club banquet.

We tried, until she arrived, to remember who our commencement speaker was. She brought that program, wrapped in plastic, very well

Alfalfa growers need to keep an eye out

Alfalta growers need to keep an eye out for some early season insect. and disease problems. More specifically, producers should look for spring black stem and clover leaf weevil larvae. Terry Gompert, extension educator in Knox County, suggests that both alfalfa destroyers are easy to find in alfalfa.

Spring black stem is a disease favored by cool, wet weather. Alhough an abundance of rain is yet to fall, lower that average temperatures and high humidities are similarly tavorable conditions.

Spring black stem is characterized by irregular black spots on stems and leaves. Infected leaves turn yellow, and drop from the plant, Lower leaves are the first to show this deterioration. As stem abrasions enlarge, most of the stem becomes black. Severely infected stems may die

Black stem is a common disease that is seen to some degree in every alfalfa field. In severe cases, a third to one-half of the leaf tissue may be lost. Since upper leaves are the last to be affected, fields may look healthy from a distance. Scouting regularly is necessary to give pro-ducers an early jump on the black stem disease. The only remedy to this disease, however, is an darly harvest. Typically harvest should occur at one-tenth bloom to receive high harvest quality and limit leaf loss, but winter-stressed plants may benefit by progressing beyond the one-tenth bloom stage. Growers may have to choose between limiting the loss of leaf tissue from blackstem or the need to let the plants recover from winter injury Clover leaf weevil larvae produce another threat to a healthy alfalfa crop. The larvae are legless worms, pale green to light brown in color, that hide in the soil or crowns of alfalfa during the day, and feed on the plants at night. Even high numbers of this pest are unlikely to cause damage to the first cutting since most feeding occurs on lower, older leaves.

These pests are susceptible to a fungus disease that could cut their population by more than 290 percent. However, rainfall of at least half an inch is necessary to trigger the onset of this disease. Dying larvae tend to climb to the top of alfalfa plants before death. This oc-currence usually provokes panic among producers as they notice large numbers of weevils in easy view. However, if rainfall continues to be sparse, weevils may survive in high numbers and adult weevils could seriously damage the regrowth after the first cutting.

Several insecticides are available to control adult clover leaf weevils. For further information on insect biology and insecticides registered for control, see local extension offices for "Insect Management Guide for Nebraska Alfalfa, Soybeans, Wheat, Range, and Pasture" (EC 95-1511) and "The Clover Leaf Weevil in Alfalfa" (NebFact 91-30)

Harvesting winter-injured alfalfa requires a fittle extra thought, skill and especially patience with the recent erratic weather, according to a University of Nebraska-Lincoln forage specialist. Bruce Anderson noted that alfalfa is normally harvested when blooms first appear - a little earlier for higher quality and a littler later for higher tonnage and persistence. But thin, spindly alfalfa strands need slightly different management, he said.

than plants undergoing drought." Because winter injury hits crown however, work harder to meet the plant's moisture needs and, therefore, only compound their winter injuries.

Later harvesting is more justifiable for drought-ridden alfalfa since it takes more time to heal from its plant nearly reaches full bloom will allow it to recover and be more productive at later cuttings, the In stitute of Agriculture and Natural Resource's specialist said.
