Three local races on the line Tuesday

Wayne Mayor, two City Council seats being contested for the Nov. 4 general election Voters will go to the polls on Tuesday to vote in the general election, as a number of local, state and federal races are on the ballot. The Wayne Herald recently contacted candidates in the Wayne Mayor race, along with the two contested Wayne City Council seats (Rodney Greve in Ward 1 and Jill Brodersen in Ward 4 are running unopposed), and asked them questions regarding their candidacy and some of the issues regarding city government and their goals for the future, if elected. All of those interviewed are on the ballot, with the exception of Sydney McCorkindale, who has entered the race for Mayor of Wayne as a write-in candidate.

Mayor Questions

Why are you running for mayor?

Chamberlain: The people. I have always said the thing that makes Wayne such a great community is the people. For Wayne, failure is never an option. When we set a goal, we will pursue that goal until it is achieved, and then we're on to the next one. It's an amazing thing to be a part of, and fascinating to watch. The people I speak with from other communities are amazed how quickly we have bounced back from last year's tornado, most communities do not have the ability to do that. And finally, the compassion and support the people of Wayne have shown me over the last four years, and through last year's storm, is a debt of gratitude that I will probably never be able to repay.

Temme: I am a local country boy with deep roots in this community. My family business is here, and I plan to raise a family right here in Wayne. The foundation of Wayne, just like all of Nebraska, is agriculture related - I know agriculture. I am also experienced in business and leadership. Bringing these skills together as mayor, I will unite this diverse community and share my passion for my hometown's future.

McCorkindale: I am running as a write-in for mayor because I want to give a voice to those who are seldom heard from. Youth are one of the most unrepresented groups in Wayne. I am a youth supporting the youth of Wayne. I have an insight into youth that my competitors do not, but am approachable and also very willing to listen to other members of the community.

What challenges does the city of Wayne face that you feel must be addressed in the next four years?

Chamberlain: 1- Property taxes. It's a problem all around the state, and that includes Wayne. Finding ways to ease the property tax burden is something I've been working on since being elected to city council 8 years ago, and there are ways we can help at the local level. A) We control our budget. Wayne's council and staff have always done really well passing a lean budget, and finding ways to do more with less. B) Growth. It's no secret when there are more homes and businesses to share the tax burden, everyone's share is reduced. And when we attract more people, school enrollments go up, which also reduces everyone's burden. Wayne has shown the ability to handle this growth as well, with new houses going in, and school enrollment going up, it tells me Wayne is becoming a destination for people with young families.

2- Budget battles. During this first term I have had to fight off the state legislature more than once. With term limits in place we end up with senators who do not understand the value some policies and pro-

City Council Questions

Why are you running for a seat on the Wayne City Council?

Eischeid: Having experience in both state and local government and being a past small business owner benefits the decisions made by the council as I can give opinions from many different points of view.

Berry: I am running for a seat on the City Council because I believe, now is the time to look toward the future of Wayne during these times of change in the workforce and economy. And what we need to do to stay competitive with larger surrounding communities and yet balance the present needs of the community.

Hawthorne: The main reasons I am running for city council is to help continue to grow our city while keeping the home town feel to it! I want people when they graduate college or high school to know that they can continue to prosper here. With this in mind we need to do it from a financially sound stand point and feel that my background would allow me to do so.

Karsky: I am running for City Council because I think Wayne is a great community, I care about the future of Wayne, and desire to give back to the community that has given so much to me.

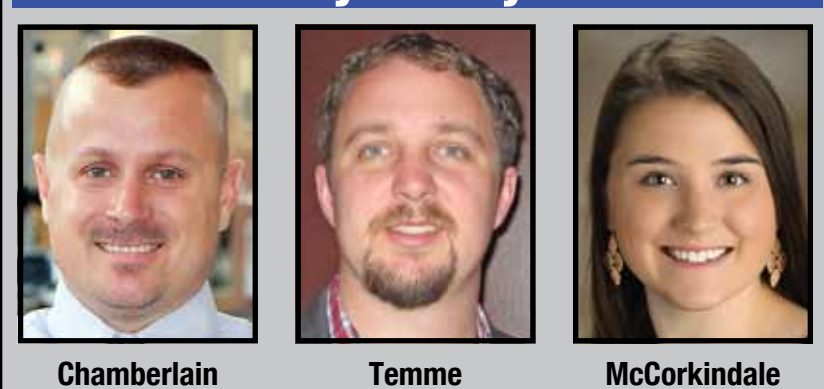

What challenges does the city face that you would want to address if you are elected to represent your ward on the City Council?

Eischeid: Many people are concerned with housing whether it be single family dwellings, rentals, or apartment buildings. We as council members want to ensure those dwellings are maintained and also fit within those zoning jurisdictions. We want to make sure our city looks as good as it can and is attractive to students and families who move to Wayne.

Berry: I believe the challenges Wayne faces include, how to expand the resources and activities that already make us a great community, yet provide for the changes needed to continue being competitive. I feel that we need more community activities that appeal to all ages, family structure and interests. I also believe that we need to work toward finding ways to keep family businesses vibrant and continue to prosper and stay family businesses, as each generation passes. It is disappointing to see family businesses end. We also need to balance the support to keep current small businesses successful and find ways to assist new businesses to get them in place and keep them from failing. I think we need to do more than just approve financial support or we are doing a disservice to the entrepreneur taking the risks.

NEMA delays with funding questioned

By JULIA JACKSON
Nebraska News Service

LINCOLN - The Nebraska Legislature's government, military and veteran affairs committee met Friday afternoon to discuss why emergency relief funds aren't dispersed promptly after they are awarded.

Sen. Dave Bloomfield of Hoskins, who sponsored the interim study, opened the hearing discussing the Nebraska Emergency Management Agency, or NEMA, and its role in awarding funds for disaster relief.

"NEMA is tasked with a great amount of responsibility and, in my opinion, they do a great job with a limited amount of resources," Bloomfield said.

Bryan Tuma, assistant director of NEMA, said the agency receives both federal and state funds, and that for disaster-related projects to be reimbursed, numerous administrative steps have to be completed.

City administrators suggested changes to NEMA for better future disaster relief.

Ervin Portis, the city administrator of Plattsmouth, said one of those changes should be better staffing for NEMA.

Portis made another suggestion to disperse the state's part of relief funds at the same time as federal funds.

Dan Berlowitz, Bellevue's city administrator, said he has been waiting seven months to be fully reimbursed for flood damage.

The total costs for Plattsmouth and Bellevue's projects were around $2 million each, and Berlowitz said Bellevue has only received around $358,000 in federal funds and around $283,000 from state funds.

"As you could imagine that does put a significant strain on the city of Bellevue's operating budget," he said.

Bellevue's projects were completed in November 2013, but the city is still waiting for around $1.3 million to be reimbursed, he said.

Second-place smiles

The Wayne High girls cross country team came away with the Class C state runner-up trophy at the 2014 Nebraska State Cross Country Championships on Friday in Kearney, and were all smiles after receiving their second-place trophy. Details of the team's efforts, as well as all the area cross country results, are in this week's Sports section.

Area native ready for NY Marathon

Shannon (Bowers) Helgoth will be able to cross one more item off her bucket list after this weekend.

The 2000 graduate of Winside High School and daughter of Dan and Teri Bowers of Winside, will be running in the New York City Marathon on Sunday.

Helgoth currently lives in North Platte with her husband and two sons. She has been training for the marathon for the last four months.

"I've always considered myself an athlete, but I started running long distance just the last five years. I knew I needed to do something to stay in shape and running just seemed to be the most natural to me," Helgoth said. "Running is also my 'me time.'"

Helgoth ran the Chicago Marathon last year, with a goal of crossing the finish line, which she did. Her goal for the New York City Marathon is 4 hours and 40 minutes.

grams have to cities all across the state. Newly elected legislators come in wanting to be tough on taxes, and the first taxes they try and eliminate are the ones that affect municipality budgets, not their own. Programs and policies that provide us resources outside of property taxes. The city of Wayne's general fund budget is around $3.2 million, with roughly $670,000 coming from property tax. It will be crucial to continue to educate and communicate with new senators to prevent the elimination of these programs and policies, so that we can control our property tax asking.

3- Preparation. If we learned anything on October 4th, 2013 it is that we cannot go through life thinking 'that will never happen in Wayne'. We must better prepare ourselves for natural disasters, and other threats that are real, and hope they will never happen here.

Temme: I spent the last three months listening to people with concerns and questions about several issues. Development of a skilled workforce base will be necessary to meet current business needs and see growth and improvement. Creating an improved working partnership with Wayne State College is a frequent topic. Parking and neighborhood integrity needs to be addressed. Currently, tax dollars are leaving Wayne for other towns with larger service and retail sectors; we need to formulate a long-term plan to provide desired options locally.

McCorkindale: With both parents working and many single parents in the city of Wayne, there are many unsupervised children after school and during the summer. The city of Wayne must continue to keep our youth safe, and provide more opportunities for youth after school. By investing in the interests of our youth, we are investing in the future residents of Wayne. As we think about our young people and our future we must also increase awareness and participation in available recycling programs.

What role should the city play in the process of encouraging economic development within city limits?

Chamberlain: The city's role in the economic development process is vital to our sustainability. Economic development means so much more than attracting new businesses, it means having a strong retention effort to encourage existing businesses to stay and grow, it means building homes for new families, and it means having first rate facilities that will attract new business and people to town, i.e. the pool, the CAC, the trail system, a first class hospital, and an 18 hole golf course just to name a few. If the city becomes unwilling to support and often incentives for economic development, we may not have any development at all.

Temme: This is a value question. We should have common sense regulation that does not inhibit new or continued investment within the city limits. We should also recognize that Wayne is a destination for the surrounding area and acknowledge the economic impact that brings. Wayne is not confined to city limit lines, there is a large rural population that calls Wayne home and spends their time and money here. Increasing the revenue generated inside and outside of the city limits should be a primary goal of the city. Animal agriculture is a great example because it adds value to local commodities and draws workers and services to our community.

McCorkindale: The city should continue to work hand in hand with the Wayne Area Economic Development group in order to support and expand retail, manufacturing, and service-oriented development. We should also continue to offer and promote financial incentives in order to keep our economy healthy and growing. Without these incentives, the city of Wayne could miss the opportunity to welcome potential business owners of Wayne. These potential business owners could help our economy grow, but without aggressive recruiting and financial incentives, Wayne may miss the opportunity of securing a successful business in our community.

Voters will determine whether or not a new swimming pool is built at the Community Activity Center. Why should the city invest in an entertainment venue that is not a revenue-generating source for a taxing entity?

Chamberlain: A vote of yes for the pool will allow sales tax generated within Wayne to pay for the construction of the new pool, this is an excellent way to keep the burden off of the property tax payers within Wayne, and should also give us the ability to keep membership rates the same. A pool is a quality of life item, the value is difficult to quantify, no community makes money off of their swimming pool, but how attractive is a community without one? And finally, the decision to build a new pool is the result of hard work put in by community members, our neighbors, who are passionate about the pool and the community. They have spent the last three years working, and educating themselves to the needs of our community, to determine the best course of action, and I believe this is it.

Temme: This is a win-win issue. The city's investment in the pool completes a long term plan to add a pool to the Community Activity Center that satisfies ADA standards. While it does not generate revenue, the added value in the livability and desirability of Wayne will far exceed the modest sales tax increase needed to finance the project.

McCorkindale: There are many activities that are not revenue-generating, however, Wayne has historically produced well-rounded individuals. It is important to provide an excellent public education, cultural activities, and a variety of physical activities. Not all children or adults are able to participate in an organized sport, but swimming is a lifetime sport. With a growing trend of obesity nationwide, it should be our passion to promote a wide variety of physical activity and preserve the opportunity to learn how to swim and enjoy swimming in the community of Wayne.

How can the city continue to work with Wayne County in sharing certain resources to save taxpayer dollars, such as the shared dispatch services for law enforcement?

Chamberlain: We need to continue to strengthen our relationship with Wayne County. Our relationship and resource sharing with Wayne County has really blossomed the last few years. Their efforts and willingness to help the city after last year's tornado were phenomenal, and I believe they would say the same about the city. What I believe what we will both be faced with in the future is a reduction in resources that we receive from the state. It will be crucial for us to continue our current pattern of resource sharing in the future, so we can both continue to provide quality services to our respective constituents.

Temme: This is a common sense situation. Sharing services between the two entities reduces overhead and ensures continuity. Sharing officers would allow for flexibility and time-off scheduling. Sharing of equipment, such as pay loaders, and maintenance on equipment would also offer tax savings by reducing duplication.

McCorkindale: In any capacity, if the city and county can share services, it is a benefit to taxpayers. Duplication of services has never been fiscally responsible. My government class has fostered my interest in local politics. Although I do not have an expanded knowledge of this subject, I am interested in learning more about this topic upon my appointment as the mayor of the city of Wayne. And as an honor roll student I will carefully look into the possibilities of sharing resources.

The city's police department currently provides assistance in traffic control at the elementary school. Would you support the city providing a resource officer who could provide additional security to the school district by maintaining a presence in one or both buildings?

Chamberlain: The idea of a resource officer for the schools has been a topic of conversation for a while, and we already have a model in place with our agreement with Wayne State. Wayne State College provides a certain percentage of the salary of one officer, and we have an officer on campus for a certain number of hours each week. I would certainly be in favor of cost sharing an officer to provide the same service for the public schools, not only for traffic control, but I believe it would also be beneficial in emergency situations. It also has a tremendous PR value, officers will have the opportunity to develop relationships with students that they typically would not have during a traffic stop.

Temme: There are several exciting solutions to this conversation. The development of a citizen's patrol or public safety crew that is trained in traffic control, crosswalk safety, crisis response, and event coordination would be a reasonable alternative to uniformed officers. These individuals would receive training from the police department, would not carry weapons or issue citations, but rather be additional eyes and ears for current law enforcement agencies. I would also support a training program for designated individuals in each school building that prepared them to deal with any violent or security situations until police arrived.

McCorkindale: As a student at Wayne High School, I do not feel the need to have a security officer in either of the school buildings. I have felt very safe throughout my years in the Wayne School district. At this time the presence of an officer in the building would be unnecessary, and I feel that some students may even be uncomfortable with their presence. It would also be difficult to define the officer's limits of authority. However, I appreciate their support of the school whenever called in for necessary means.

Don't get me started

By: Michael Carnes
Managing Editor

Make your own decisions: vote

The political season – thankfully – is quickly coming to a close.

On Tuesday, voters will go to the polls and make their selections on everything from Governor of Nebraska to Mayor of Wayne. We'll elect our school boards, our town councils, our county board and even whether or not to build a new pool at the Community Activity Center.

There's a lot to decide in this upcoming election – and when it comes to answering the question "Who should I vote for?" – we're going to let you make up your own mind.

Some newspapers like to make what they like to call an "informed choice" by endorsing a candidate for a particular office. When the Omaha World-Herald and Lincoln Journal Star make their picks, the candidates who are "blessed" with those newspapers' choices can't get the word out fast enough. Campaign ads seem to explode from the TV set and the car radio, proclaiming their candidate to have received kudos from this publication or that.

And, quite frankly, the endorsements of those publications aren't really worth that much, once you consider each paper's history in endorsing candidates.

The World-Herald has tilted conservative almost since the invention of the printing press. Conversely, the Journal Star has endorsed more than its share of liberal candidates over the years, leaving some with the impression that the Lincoln paper is the anti-Omaha paper. I know the Lincoln paper has endorsed more than its share of conservative candidates over the years as well, so it's hard to really label the Journal Star as a "liberal-bending" newspaper, as some are prone to do.

Most of the other regional dailies in the state of Nebraska, quite honestly, aren't likely to endorse a liberal candidate, even if they were the only candidate running for a major office. Some newspapers are starting to open themselves up, however.

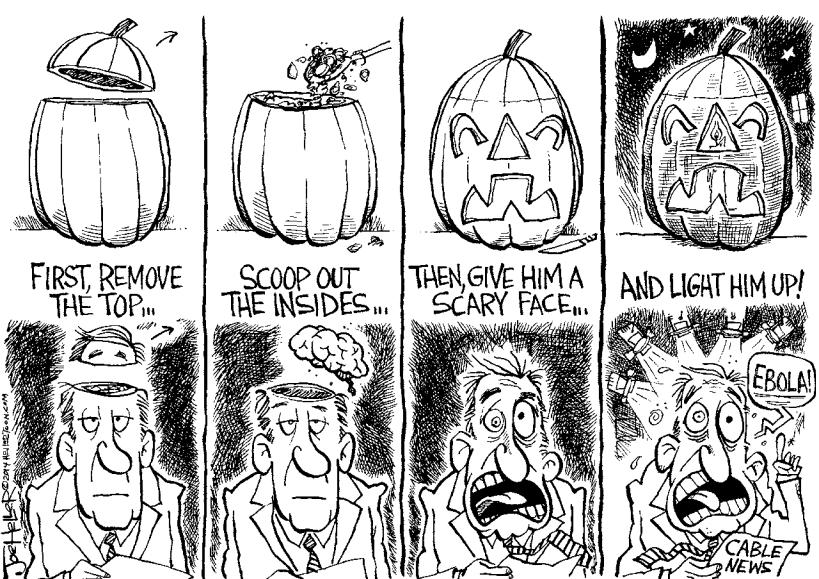

The York News-Times management recently wrote a scathing editorial about the corruption that, they believe, has befallen the two major political parties and all but called the Republican and Democrat candidates for U.S. Senate clueless buffoons while endorsing an independent candidate for the seat.

Back in my early days of journalism, a twice-weekly newspaper that I worked for was one of a handful in Nebraska – and several across the country – that endorsed Ross Perot for President of the United States during the 1992 election. The newspaper where I worked at the time was in the county seat of a county that was so conservative in its politics, it makes Wayne County's predominantly-Republican voter registration list look like it came from San Francisco.

Here at The Wayne Herald, we are fully aware of the fact that you have probably read, heard and seen everything about the major candidates that you're going to see. You've probably already made your mind up that you'll vote for Candidate X or – if you're one of those people who can't be bothered with doing anything more than voting the party line – you're ready to go in and mark down all the candidates representing "your" party. You don't need us to tell you who the best candidate for a particular office is – our job is simply to inform you of who the candidates are and get them to tell us why you should vote for them on Tuesday, Nov. 4. Once we do that, the choice is all up to you.

Of course, if you've read this column long enough, you know what I think about the two major political parties (if ever there were a "Don't Get Me Started" topic... this is the clear front-runner). But don't let any of that influence your decision – and don't let anybody tell you that who you voted for is a "wasted vote." I can't think of a bigger affront to the freedoms our forefathers and millions of Americans have fought and died for than to ridicule a fellow American for "wasting" his vote on a candidate, regardless of what that candidate's chances for being elected were at the time.

Do your research, ask the questions you want answers to, and go to the polls on Tuesday, Nov. 4 to exercise your right to cast your ballot. Only you know who you feel is the best choice – you don't need some stuffed-shirt in the big city downtown newspaper offices doing your thinking for you.

pol-i-tics:

Ideas and activities relating to gaining and using power; getting elected at any cost; casting doubt about your opponent; casting the blame for your lack of leadership on somebody else.

We've been hearing that word a lot in the past few weeks as the Legislature's Department of Correctional Services Special Investigative Committee has voted to subpoena the Ten Year Governor to explain why things have gone so wrong in a department for which he must take ultimate responsibility.

In case you missed it, the Department of Corrections released an inmate named Nikko Jenkins after ignoring his own pleas for psychiatric help. He subsequently killed four people in Omaha within weeks of his release. The same Department of Corrections also allowed the early release of several hundred inmates after its own legal department ignored a state Supreme Court ruling on calculating sentences.

While saying he would have been happy to testify without being subpoenaed, he also called the legislative committee's actions "political." He contended that committee chairman Sen. Steve Lathrop of Omaha was merely trying to help his colleague, state Sen. Brad Ashford of Omaha, get elected to Congress. Then he blamed the duo for being responsible for the good time laws that correction's officials use to determine prisoner release dates.

The state's lame-duck Attorney General called the committee action Kabuki Theater. That recently resurrected and already overused slang refers to posturing, overacting and grand gestures. His was the first of a chorus from a handful of Republican operatives trying to shift the blame from the Administrative to the Legislative branch.

Pay attention here. The Legislature proposes bills, subjects them to public hearings and three rounds of debate, and then passes or kills them based on their merit. The Administrative branch has the opportunity to sign or not sign said bills. If the bill becomes law, the Administrative branch is supposed to administer the bill. The Judicial branch enforces said laws. Pretty straightforward, I'd say.

Into the middle of the correction's debacle, insert Sen. Ashford and his switch from Independent to Democrat – remember, he started as a Democrat years ago, then became a Republican, then an Independent – and his run against U.S. Rep. Lee Terry of Omaha, a Republican. That should explain why a bevy of the state's top Republicans are so anti-Ashford. Besides, the polls show this to be a very close race.

Then comes the National Republican Congressional Committee with an advertisement showing Ashford and Nikko Jenkins faces side by side. That's dark and reminiscent of similar attacks against Democrat Michael Dukakis years ago by linking him to a bad guy named Willie Horton. To say that Ashford had anything to do with Jenkin's release is as ridiculous as tying it to Terry.

In other red herring news – something that misleads or distracts from the relevant or important issue – Ten Year Governor and his GOP buddies would like you to believe that Ashford (as judiciary committee chairman) and Lathrop (as the special committee chairman) were responsible for the early release fiasco. Some have gone so far as to request that both senators, who officially serve until Jan. 7, 2015, should resign right now.

What would that accomplish? Maybe take the heat off the badly bungled corrections situations, or the equally awkward lieutenant governor issues, or the countless problems in the Department of Health and Human Services, and the...

Maybe President Harry Truman was right: "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen."

When labels cloud our judgment

I am concerned that our way of government is being corrupted by those of us who are influenced by the D, R and I labels. In recent years, more and more voters in Nebraska use party labels as their only criteria for voting. Each political party has a reputation for leaning philosophically one way or another, and we can be swayed in our thinking, or lack of it, and vote the party line. This kind of "group think" clouds our best judgment in deciding who is the best candidate for the job.

Those of us who vote, and there are fewer and fewer of us, control what is happening in local, state and national government. In other words, we minority of the population are responsible for the outcomes. In this case we are responsible for government dysfunction. The majority of the population are discouraged by what we have created which adds to their frustration, anger, and helplessness.

At one time in Nebraska we were a people of moderation, people who made their political decisions based on which candidate was best for the country regardless of labels. We would talk with family and neighbors about political issues and solve problems. Now we have become divided communities where people are afraid of expressing opinions for fear of being labeled. No wonder fewer and fewer people vote.

Now that we minority have created this dysfunctional government, we get what we deserve. Let's stop this craziness of using labels before it is too late.

Government should not be done in secret

In November 2013, the current Lower Elkhorn Natural Resources District (LENRD) board members approved a revised set of bylaws that strengthened the secrecy and increased the activities of what they call an Executive subcommittee.

Subcommittees are not currently subject to the existing open meetings laws. Since this revision the Executive Subcommittee has researched and authored 12 resolutions behind closed doors. These resolutions have affected spending, budget items, personnel hiring including a new manager, wages for the entire district staff, job descriptions and more.

Because the remainder of the LENRD board rubber-stamps these policies after only the minimum required public notice, the process is legal. Just because something is legal does not make it right.

It has been said that we as Nebraskan's get the government we deserve. The decision to attend or not attend a meeting where elected representatives are forming policy and deciding on spending tax money should be yours. It should not be withheld from you by those who occupy the seats of government. The open meetings statutes allow for closed sessions of full board meetings under carefully crafted conditions approved by the legislature and controlled by the courts.

It is my contention that most, if not all, of the issues that have been handled in Executive Subcommittee would not be an appropriate closed session purpose. The NRD's should not be allowed to make these decisions behind closed doors using the subcommittee loophole.

If you deserve better, find out who your current LENRD representative is and vote for the challenger. Then tell your state senator you want all subcommittees subjected to the open meetings statutes.

Legislative Update Important days are around the corner

There are a few important dates just around the corner. Tuesday, Nov. 4 is Election Day and Tuesday, Nov. 11 is Veterans Day. These two days go hand-in-hand.

We have the privilege, the right, and a duty to vote and it is all of these privilege, right, and duty. We, by voting, determine the individuals who represent us at the local, state and national levels.

Voting is a privilege: Too many in our country do not understand the price that has been paid by those who have served this nation in the armed forces during war or in times of peace to preserve this privilege. We get to choose because men and women since the Revolutionary War have stood strong to preserve that privilege.

Voting is a right: Our nation has struggled since it's very inception with the question of who among us should enjoy the privilege and the right to vote. Should it be only those who own property, only the educated, only men, only white folks, only those who can go to the voting place? These questions have all been answered with a resounding NO! We, as a nation, do require that an individual be registered as a resident of a given location, there are not many other restrictions.

Voting is a duty: As a voter, you have a duty to inform yourself. You need to know that you are voting for what you know is in your best interest. Do you really think an increase in the minimum wage is in your best interest, learn the facts BEFORE you vote, there are two sides to this issue. Does the candidate that you are thinking about share your beliefs? If you are pro-life, don't vote for someone who thinks abortion is OK. If you are for the right to keep and bear arms, don't vote for someone that believes in gun control. If you want smaller government, don't vote for those who think government should do more. If there is an area where you do not know, it might be best to leave that space open, an uninformed vote could come back to haunt you.

Many have sacrificed to give you the opportunity to express your beliefs at the ballot box. Don't mock them by casting an uninformed vote.

Chairman of the LENRD Board of Directors, Joel Hansen of Wayne, received 10 applications for the position. The LENRD Executive Board will be interviewing four candidates on Friday, Nov. 7. The finalists are:

Hansen said, "The Executive Board was very pleased with the quality of the applicants and we are looking forward to visiting with our finalists. The Executive Board will recommend one of these four candidates for approval at the Nov. 25 LENRD Board meeting."

LENRD's general manager, Stan Staab of Norfolk, announced at the August meeting of the Board of Directors, that he will retire on Jan. 8, 2015.

Heuermann Lecture is Nov. 6

Given agriculture's growing complexity and the importance of feeding an increasing global population, clear communication about the science of food production is critical. "What Does Agricultural Communication Mean in the 21st Century?" will be the subject of the next Heuermann Lecture Nov. 6, as agricultural broadcaster Orion Samuelson leads a panel discussion.

The free lecture, sponsored by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, will be at 3:30 p.m. at the Nebraska Innovation Campus Conference Center, 2021 Transformation Drive.

Samuelson presents 18 agricultural reports daily on WGN Radio in Chicago, and is syndicated with National Farm Report and Samuelson Sez commentary programs. He also co-hosts "This Week in Agribusiness" with Max Armstrong.

Samuelson's commitment to agriculture has been recognized by organizations including American Farm Bureau Federation, the state of Illinois, University of Illinois, National Radio Broadcaster Hall of Fame and others.

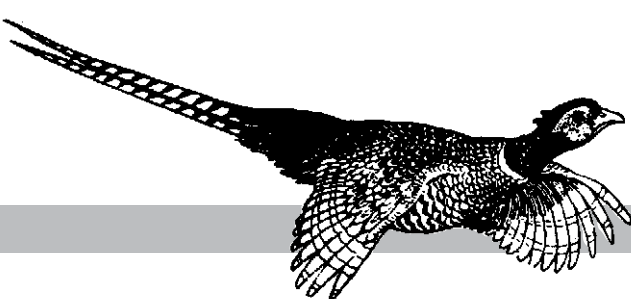

Lectures are streamed live online at heuermannlectures.unl.edu, and aired live on UNL campus and state cable channel 4. Lectures are archived after the event and are broadcast on NET2 World.

Halloween is not a favorite holiday

What have we done to deserve this weather??? I said that to a neighbor yesterday and she responded with, "what will we have to endure to make up for it?" Curious how Nebraskans think they don't deserve good weather.

The trees have been absolutely beautiful all month. So have the burning bushes. I don't think we have to go to Colorado or to New England to see colorful trees.

I am concerned about the area north of our house; the pine tree that was there died and was taken down this summer. It was fascinating to watch; these guys knew what they were doing. Even the roots were pulled up. But I'm thinking we will be more aware of the north wind without it.

In front of our home, and all around the cul de sac, actually, are linden trees. These trees are simply a pain! Granted, they turn a lovely yellow in the fall, but then, they start falling. They are small, they are everywhere, and they track in something fierce! Give me a good old maple any time.

Diane Becker wrote last week about the fact that Halloween is her least favorite holiday. If you've been reading this over the years, you know it is mine, also. I just can't get into ghosts and witches and zombies and "walking dead," especially not walking dead! And I'm amazed at how much money is spent by adults when it comes to costumes.

I did have to chuckle at the costume scrimmage the NU baseball team had last week. There was a teletubby, and Olaf from Frozen, and a Ryan Lochte in a Speedo swim suit.

Darrin Erstadt was Chewbacca, and the winner was a guy dressed like Bo Pelini. That had to be the easiest, a sweat shirt, a head set, and a cat!! If you are interested, you can go to Huskers.com and click on baseball to see the whole bunch.

Of course, never having seen Star Wars, someone had to tell me that was Chewbacca. I haven't see Frozen, either, but I'm well aware of it. One of my neighbors makes Barbie clothes and sells them online. She can barely keep up with the requests for Elsa. And last night, she took her granddaughter to Boo at the Zoo and every other little girl was dressed in an Elsa dress.

I did hear on the radio that one of the adult demands this year is for a Mork suit, having to do with the death of Robin Williams. I have to confess I have never seen an episode of Mork and Mindy, either. I think I'm culturally deprived!!

However, at this late stage in my life, I think I will just shrug my shoulders and live with the deprivation. Which reminds me, the little two year old, Lucy, who sits in the back of the church with us on Saturday nights, was entertaining us by shrugging her shoulders and making ugly faces! I admit I made some back to her; she's so cute!! So, celebrate Halloween, however you like. Chocolate is now good for the memory!!!

Orchard workshops being planned Nov. 8

Are you interested in growing your own fruit trees? This is a great way to add nutritious and inexpensive food to your table, with the satisfaction of producing it yourself.

We are beginning a second year of Orchard Workshops in Dakota City at the USDA Service Center meeting room very soon. The first one will be on Saturday, Nov. 8, from 10:00 a.m.-12 p.m.

These classes are free and open to anyone with an interest in growing tree fruit. While most people think of apples when growing fruit, we are capable of growing many fruit trees in our area including peaches, pears, apricots, and many more.

Our first three classes have been scheduled. On Nov. 8 we will be talking about the basics of planting and caring for trees, including site selection and weather preparation. On Saturday, Nov. 22 we will be covering apple tree basics including variety and rootstock selection, the importance of pollinators, and how to harvest. On Saturday, Dec. 6 we will discuss growing other fruit trees that do well in our area, including pear, peach, apricot, and more.

Starting in January, we will have classes on brambles, pollinators, pruning, and pest control.

The classes are a joint project of South Sioux City, the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Extension in Dakota County, and the Nebraska Forest Service.

For more information please call the Extension office in Dakota City at (402) 987-2140.

Ag climate change app is available

The $346 billion U.S. animal agriculture industry is already paying the price for an unstable climate with more frequent and extreme weather events that are devastating to individual producers and influence costs throughout the entire industry, a University of Nebraska-Lincoln animal environmental engineer says.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal Agriculture in a Changing Climate project has launched a website at www.animalagricultureandclimatechange.org to help.

"Climate change costs this industry money; we need to understand and plan to reduce those costs," said Rick Stowell, a UNL Extension animal environmental engineer and the lead project investigator for the project.

The website offers free, science-based educational resources and online training. Materials target all those working in animal agriculture that need to have a better understanding of the issues and consequences of climate change on the animal agriculture industry. It will be available through July 2016.

New data released in September indicate that atmospheric concentrations have risen faster than expected in 2013, Stowell said.

"Even small changes in climate affect us. Over the next 30 years, agriculture will have to feed an additional 2 billion people as well as adapt to a changing climate. We have to become more resilient and better prepared," he said.

Other universities involved include: Cornell University, University of Georgia, University of Minnesota, Texas A&M University, and Washington State University.

The terms of a second flight in 2018 or 2019 are subject to change and approval.
