Nebraska is one of only 16 states that screen for all disorders recommended by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Nebraska first began screening

Today, the newborn screen includes bloodspot, hearing, and pulse oximetry testing for critical congenital heart disease. The Nebraska newborn screening panel screens for all 35 disorders recommended by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, and is required by Nebraska law, as it can help prevent intellectual disabilities, brain and organ damage, seizures, stroke or other long-term problems. metabolic, neurological, or other apparent at birth. If left untreated, newborn screening conditions may cause serious illness, developmental disability, intellectual impairment, or death. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, newborn screening is one of the top public health achievements in modern history.

The first disease Nebraska screened for was phenylketonuria (PKU), an inherited metabolic disorder that some babies are born with. It's caused by a defect in the enzyme that breaks down the amino acid phenylalanine. It can be controlled with a low-protein diet and avoidance of the artificial sweetener aspartame (usually marketed as Splenda or Equal), which contains phenylalanine. However, it's critical that the diagnosis is made at birth, before symptoms begin. PKU can cause severe intellectual and developmental disabilities if not treated very early, and when a baby shows the first symptoms, the damage is irreversible.

Each year in Nebraska, approximately 60 babies are identified with a condition detected through newborn screening. The screening allows treatment to be initiated within the first few days and weeks of life, and for some diseases, this intervention means the infants will go on to lead normal, healthy lives. Screening has led to earlier detection and intervention in diseases such as sickle cell disease, spinal muscular atrophy, congenital primary hypothyroidism and cystic fibrosis, which has increased life expectancy and decreased the disease burden for many with these The early hearing detection and intervention program is another part of newborn screening, done with specialized audiology equipment. Although the hearing tests are not mandated by Nebraska law, screening for hearing loss in newborns enables infants to be diagnosed from a very early age. Prior to infant hearing screening, the average age a child was diagnosed with hearing loss in the United States was 30 months of age. Hearing loss is an invisible condi-

Nebraska Medicaid selects bids for new health plans

After a thorough evaluation of five excellent bids, the Nebraska Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) has selected three health plans to provide health care services for Nebraskans in Heritage Health, its Medicaid managed care program, over the next several years. The selected health plans are Molina Healthcare of Nebraska, Nebraska Total Care, and UnitedHealth Care of the Midlands.

"We're excited to work with these three health plans to ensure Medicaid members in Nebraska continue to receive the health care that they need," DHHS CEO Dannette R. Smith said.

The contracts are for five years, with two-year optional renewals. DHHS renews its Medicaid contracts by seeking bids from health plans. After a request for proposals (RFP) was initially released in April, five bids were received in

"We are extremely pleased with all of the bids we received," Medicaid Division Director Kevin Bagley said. "Ultimately, while we had to choose three, all five bids were impressive and showed high regard for the Medicaid program and Nebraska."

The selection process began after the proposals were submitted earlier this year. The proposals were scored based on their respective quality, appropriateness, and thoroughness. Stakeholder input from several listening sessions earlier this year was front and center throughout this drafting process.

After scoring the evaluations of the proposals, DHHS interviewed the bidders to hear more about their plans and priorities for the next contract cycle. Key issues in these interviews included:

·Incorporating dental services within their health plans;

 Actively using voluntary care and case management to help improve members' lives;

·Standardizing certain require-

ing) across health plans to reduce provider burden;

· Providing innovations to add value to members' health care experiences; and ·Improving access to providers across Nebraska.

"By meeting with the bidders in person, we were able to emphasize to them what matters the most to Nebraskans. We believe it is critical that the voices of the people we serve are heard," Director Bagley

Nebraska Medicaid will now work with the selected health plans on the orderly transition to the new contracts, to occur on January 1, 2024. Medicaid will also continue to meet with members of the community across Nebraska both inperson and online to speak with them about the changes, answer questions, and adjust our plans as needed. The next listening tour will be held in mid-to-late-October, with more details to be available in groundbreaking ceremony was held Sept. 21 in which investors, the architect, contractors and members of the public were invited to view the "before" of the project.

The former church was built in 1909, but last year its congregation decided to sell the building due to expenses associated with upkeep.

A group of local investors decided to come together to save the historapartments, purchasing the building last fall after learning it could possibly be demolished with a sale. The new Sanctuary Apartments will preserve the exterior of the building as it is remodeled into six apartment units: two 3-bedroom, two 2-bedroom, and two 1-bedroom units. The brick building also features 49 original stained-glass windows, almost all of which will be kept in the new design.

The architect for the remodel is Roy Ley with Hoke Ley, an architecture and interior design firm in Lawrence, Kansas. Roy has already designed several buildings in Wayne, including State Nebraska Bank & Trust's Main Branch in downtown Wayne and its SNBuilding at 1010 Main Street. The general contractor is Otte Construction from Wayne, and local/regional contractors will be used as much as possible throughout construction to help support the northeast Nebraska economy.

Construction is expected to be completed by the late summer of 2023. For more information about the Sanctuary Apartments, contact Matthew Ley at (402) 375-1130.

Trojans fall short in 36-32 football shootout and forth for much of the night,

Hartington-Newcastle had the final say in a 36-32 shootout win over Wakefield Friday. The lead changed hands six times in this hard-nosed battle, with the visiting Wildcats scoring on a oneyard dive by Riley Sudbeck with :32 left to seal the victory. "It was just another hard nosed, smash mouth high school football game," coach Mike Hassler said. "I thought Hartington-Newcastle came out and set the bar for how physical the game was going to be and we played catch-up most of the night. I thought we responded and fought back, we could just never quite get the tide to swing in our favor. Hartington-Newcastle was just fortunate enough to punch in the last score and we ran out of time."

Cade Johnson put Wakefield on the board late in the first period with a 30-yard gallop to make it 8-6, then added a two-yard run and threw a 16-yard pass to Hunter Schultz to give the Trojans a 20-16 halftime advantage.

It went back and forth after that. Hartington-Newcastle reclaimed the lead with a three-yard run by Sudbeck, only to see Wakefield take it back when Tim Kaufman ran 22 yards to make it 26-24. The Wildcats regained the lead at 30-26 on a Lane Heimes eight-yard run, but Wakefield responded with 7:13 to go when Johnson hit paydirt from two yards away.

finish, and the visitors got the winning score when Subeck scored his second rushing touchdown of the night to give H-N the win.

That set the stage for an exciting

Hassler said his team played hard to the final whistle in spite of "This group just knows how to grind. No matter what defenses throw at us, these guys just battle and find a way to move the ball," he said ."Outside of the one turnover I thought we played a real clean game. We still can get some things cleaned up as we come down the home stretch, but I'm pleased with Johnson finished with 171 yards on 27 carries and was 4-of-6 passing for 59 yards. Kaufman added 60 yards on 11 tries. Schultz was the leading receiver with 57 yards on three catches.

Defensively, Johnson had 13 tackles, Kaufman added 12, Cael Johnson had 11 tackles and an interception, and Jesse Lundahl and Anthony Valenzuela each had seven

"The loss was tough, but it was even harder to lose two of our seniors for the season," he said. "We lost Matt and Hunter and I just want to personally thank both of these young men for the time they have put into the Trojan football program. It was fun to watch them tem across our Nation. During 4-H Week and beyond, we celebrate our amazing members and tireless volunteers. The power of the 4-H program, empowering nearly six million young people across the United States with skills to lead for a lifetime. The Nebraska Extension 4-H Youth Development program works towards the outcomes of the Nebraska 4-H strategic plan. Each year, Nebraska 4-H measures the success in reaching these outcomes. More than 1,000 youth from across the state contribute their responses to a mixed methods study. The results and participant comments shared in these reports illustrate the impact Nebraska 4-H is making in the lives of young people. Some of the impacts include:

tional 4-H Week. 4-H is part of

· 2,650 Nebraska high schoolers who took part in the Next Chapter Nebraska college-readiness program. 93 % of the Next Chapter Nebraska participants shared that 4-H has helped them make decisions about college.

· Teams of youth develop unique business concepts around a given widget which is used as inspiration for a product or service during INVENTURE Day. Teams move through the INVENTURE Factory, completing challenges and working together to develop their business idea. 71% of the youth who participated shared that activities completed during INVENTURE Day helped them understand the process of creating a business.

In Nebraska, one in three ageeligible youth participate in 4-H. Through 4-H, these young people gain experiences that help them become creative thinkers, skilled employees, and good citizens. Nebraska Extension not only brings 4-H to Nebraska; it brings an array of University resources and research by partnering with schools, afterschool programs and youth organizations to provide curriculum and educational content. As a result of this involvement, the next generation of Nebraskans are ready to enhance our workforce and become responsible community leaders.

For more information on Nebraska 4-H contact your local Nebraska Extension Office.

Before the official start of our new year, Betty Wittig had presented each attendee with their own personal display flag from Sandi Utecht, the daughter of former member Delores Utecht. The membership never ceases to be thankful for the joy that these small surprise gifts have given our members over the past many years.

Four potential new members were already in attendance including Arlyss Temme, Doris Meyer, Ellen Heineman, and Karen Zach and were welcomed by President Minutes were read and the treasurer's report given. The membership noted that Pat Straight would no longer be attending meetings as she has moved to live near her son, Don, and his family. Ruth Victor will fulfill Pat's position as Historian for this new year.

Betty Wittig provided everyone with treats to enjoy.

Our lives are 'a work in progress'

As I was preparing for one of my sermons, someone popped into my office and asked how the message was coming along. My response was, as it often is, "it's a work in I like this response because sermons are rarely ever "complete". Sure, as a Pastor I deliver a sermon on Sunday, but there's often more that can be said. Another example to share. One more piece of the passage to tease out. Even if I don't like how it's coming along, I know it can always change.

Our lives, much like a Sunday sermon, are works in progress. Where we are today, what we currently do, or the mistakes that we've made do not define us. They are not permanent markers of who we are, though sometimes the results can mark us.

Samson is a good example of someone who is a work in progress. We read about Samson's life in the Old Testament book of Judges. Though his mother was barren, an angel came to her and said that she would conceive and bear a child. This was not to be just any child, however. Samson was singled out to be a Nazirite, separated and consecrated for God, who would ultimately deliver Israel from the Phi-

Just because he was consecrated for God didn't mean that Samson was perfect. In fact, Samson was perfectly imperfect. As a Nazarite, he would have vowed to abstain from alcohol, to remain ritually clean by not touching a corpse, and refrain from having his hair cut. In one bad decision after another, Samson manages to break each of these vows.

Fast forward to the end of the story: Samson's hair (which was the outward representation of the miraculous strength God gave him) was cut leaving him powerless, he was blinded and bound in captivity, and we find him being put on display by his captors the Philistines at a large party.

Samson had to have been thinking to himself, "What happened with my life? How did I get here? Where is God in all of this?" The person who was set aside by God as consecrated, who was thought to be the next great hope in Israel's troubles with the Philistines, was now a beaten and broken shell of who he was. When you and I experience moments like this - moments where we've made bad choices...

that it seems like our life has gone He wound up in places he never we have a tendency to think that back. God has left us. That we have hit then started to dig some more. We back to where we once were.

In the midst of all of Samson's is how it will always be. troubles, as he reflects on all the poor decisions he made during his life and how those decisions have led him to this place, God reminds Samson that He's there. In Judges 16:22, we read that Samson's hair began to grow back. It's a simple statement. A throwaway statement, does it matter that his hair starts to grow? What is the author's purpose for putting it in the story?

The point of including this seem-God wasn't done with Samson. Samson was a work in progress that God wasn't finished with yet. Even though the biblical strongman wasn't able to consistently follow God's command during his life, and even though he found himself broken down and humiliated, God never left Samson. The hair that had been his claim to great strength slowly returned. God continued to work through Samson until the very end. This is demonstrated in Samson's call to God to provide just enough strength to push the two primary supporting pillars of the building he was in so that the building, and all those in it, would be destroyed. In God's response to this call, Samson fulfilled the prophecy that the angel announced to his mother years earlier: It is he who ror shall begin to deliver Israel from the hand of the Philistines.

completely off the rails and that we thought he would be. And he surecan't possibly be redeemed - I think ly wondered how he would ever get

Sometimes we look around and rock bottom, grabbed a shovel, and ask "How did I get here?" We make decisions that, in hindsight, may don't see any way that we can get not have been a good idea. We find ourselves wondering if how it is now

The good news is that God is not done with you. You are a work in progress, a masterpiece that is under continued refinement until the final day. While struggling like Samson at times in our lives, hope can seem like a distant dream. But, God knows what He's doing. He really. Considering all that Samson knows the plans He has for your is struggling with right now, why life. So, even in the hard moments where you wonder how you got to where you are, and whether you can get back to where you want to be, know that you are not stuck. God ingly unimportant footnote is this: has not left you. You are a work in

Various fall pasture situations are discussed

Grazing For Interseeding By Ben Beckman

Pastures and hay meadows provide higher quality feed, are more productive, and require fewer inputs when they have good forage legumes growing in them.

Outside of moisture, nitrogen is often the limiting nutrient in pasture production. While commercial fertilizer may be a quick and easy option, it's costly. Instead, let's grow our own N using legumes.

Do you have a pasture area or hay meadow that is relatively free of weeds and makes up no more than about 15 percent of your total pasture acres? If so, here is what I want you to do. From now until that grass will grow no more this year, graze that grass hard. Grub it down, then graze it some more. With dry weather this summer, maybe you have already accomplished this on a portion of your ground already.

EXTENSION

Now why would I recommend overgrazing? Surely it will hurt the grass. Well, that's exactly what we want. Next spring, you will interseed legumes like red clover, white clover, and alfalfa into that grass to make it more nutritious and productive. We may even consider a winter frost seeding if conditions are right.

The biggest challenge to establishing legumes into a grass sod is competition by that existing grass on new, slow growing legume seedlings. Anything you do to reduce competition and slow down grass growth will help. Overgrazing this By Jerry Volesky fall prior to next spring's seeding will weaken the grass and slow its spring growth, thus giving new legume seedlings a better chance to get started. With drought causing unplanned overgrazing this summer, interseeding may be a way to make some lemonade out of that particular lemon. Of course, all this depends on moisture next spring to

While you're at it, also collect some soil samples. Then analyze them and apply any needed fertilizer. Legumes especially need good phosphorus and the proper soil pH.

So, add some legumes to your pasture next spring. Graze your grass this fall until virtually nothing is left. Then, keep grazing a couple weeks more just to make sure. Legumes you add next spring will establish better because of it.

Fall Thistle Control

Did you spray thistles this past spring and summer? If so, it would be a good idea to revisit those areas and even though it has been dry, there are likely some remaining or new growth that has occurred. October and early November is a key time to control thistles in pastures. There are several biennial thistles, but musk, plumeless, Scotch, and bull thistles are our most problematic. Biennials require portions of two growing seasons to flower/reproduce. They develop from seed the first season into a flat rosette. When trying to control biennial thistles, destruction of rosettes prior to flowering (bolting) is an effective means of preventing seed formation and subsequent spread.

Another thistle to look out for is Canada thistle. Canada thistle is a creeping perennial that can be controlled with fall spraying, in conjunction with other management options in the spring.

While in the rosette stage, thistles are more effectively controlled using herbicides. It is important to note that fall spraying of thistles is not a silver bullet and effective control often needs repeated applications. It will take several years of timely control before the soil seed bank is reduced. There are many herbicides labeled for thistle control. Take care when purchasing products and always read/follow label directions before use.

GrazonNext® HL, Milestone®, Chaparral®, Graslan® L, Stinger®, Overdrive®, and Tordon 22K® are all products that are labelled for use on biennial thistles as well as Canada thistle. 2,4-D mixed with dicamba is also an effective option but should be sprayed when temperatures are warmer for the highest efficacy. When using Tordon 22K® or Graslan® L, both products are restricted use and contain picloram. Use extreme caution around other vegetation, especially trees, as both products will kill woody plants.

Last year, portions of eastern Nebraska saw an unprecedented number of fall armyworm caterpillars feeding on alfalfa, brome regrowth in pastures, and newly seeded small grain crops such as wheat, triticale, and rve. While we may not see similar numbers this year, it is a good idea to be "Fall armyworm aware" and keep an eye out for this insect.

Fall armyworm caterpillars can be distinguished from other Lepidopterans by markings on the head that resemble an inverted "Y" and four spots on the last abdominal segment that form a square. This insect does not overwinter in Nebraska, but rather migrates north from southern states when populations build up in late summer. Once caterpillars are ¾ inch, they can do considerable damage in a few days. Because of this, it is important to scout fields and pastures in the early morning and late afternoon, when caterpillars are most active, to spot them when they are small.

Remember a reasonable treatment threshold is finding 3 or more caterpillars per square foot within a field or pasture. There are several insecticides labeled to control this insect including Mustang Maxx, Besiege, and Sevin. For forage crops be sure to check the grazing restriction and post-harvest interval. When considering a chemical treatment option, keep in mind caterpillars ¾ inch or longer are close to maturity and can be harder to control with an insecticide.

Fall armyworm feeding declines with cooler temperatures and the adult moths eventually migrate south. In the meantime, be sure to keep an eye on your pastures and newly seeded fields for any sign of

Northeast Community College students get experiences at the Nebraska State Fair

A popular attraction at summer fairs across the country feature newborn or hatched animals that allow patrons to see them up close. For a group of students at Northeast Community College, they had an experience working with animals in a such a setting they'll nev-

Students in the Veterinary Technology program traveled to the Nebraska State Fair in Grand Island to assist in the birthing pavilion, hosted by the Nebraska Veterinary Medical Association (NVMA). The NVMA operates the pavilion every year during the fair.

Dr. Kassie Wessendorf, veterinary technician instructor, said NVMA obtains animals from local producers that have been bred to give birth during the state fair.

"The animals are monitored overnight by fourth year veterinary students on externship. Northeast veterinary technician students helped monitor the animals throughout the day, give treatments, and answer questions from the general public," Wessendorf said. "They also learned about proper record keeping, gestation lengths, and signs of labor in animals.

Animals typically include dairy and beef cattle, swine, goats, sheep, and ducks and chicks. There were three sows in the birthing pavilion - one with a litter, one that was in the early stages of labor, and one that was being induced.

"I really enjoyed watching the sow go into labor and getting to experience that for the first time in person," said student Vanessa Lukes, Geneva. "It was a huge learning experience for me because I didn't grow up around large ani-

The Northeast students had the opportunity to help milk one of the dairy cows that had calved as the calf could not drink enough milk to keep the cow's udder comfortable. Students also monitored the duck pool and slide, an area where recently hatched ducklings were able

The experience was part of a grant the program through the USDA to encourage students into food animal medicine. Northeast Community College's Veterinary Technology program is collaborating with several businesses and organizations in Nebraska to expand large animal experiences for the students.

Wessendorf said they hope to take students back to the state fair's birthing pavilion in future

"It is important to give students opportunities in food animal medicine that we don't always get on campus," she said. "Students saw things like farrowing crates, milking methods and egg incubators. This was a great chance to educate the students and for the students to share their knowledge with the general public." Student Gicelle Garcia-Barraza, Hastings, said the experience confirmed for her she has chosen the correct career path.

Growing up in the city I never had the luxury to be around large animals," Garcia-Barraza said "One of my favorite things about the birthing pavilion was learning how to milk a cow. It was such an amazing experience and it helped me confirm that the vet tech program was definitely my calling."

Enjoying Nebraska's great outdoors

time to get outdoors. From hunting to hiking to havrack rides, there are plenty of opportunities to enjoy the natural beauty of Nebraska this

Hunting is part of our cultural heritage in Nebraska. It's part of what makes this the Good Life. Hunting trips create opportunities for parents to bond with their kids and for friends to spend time together making memories.

We want to introduce the next generation to the joys of hunting. Participating in the Take 'em Hunting program, through the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission (NGPC), is a great way to introduce a beginner to the pastime. To participate, simply invite a newcomer to go hunting, take a picture with them, and submit it on the Game and Parks website (outdoornebraska.gov). You'll be entered into a raffle to win cool prizes like a John Deer gator from AKRS Equipment.

NGPC offers workshops to help Nebraskans learn and refine their outdoor skills. The Mentored Youth Archery Program is available to bowhunter education graduates who are 12 to 17 years old. It pairs deer hunting beginners with qualified instructors for a full archery season. Mentors teach participants how to scout, hang tree stands, interpret animal signs, and safely handle the animals they harvest. For more information, visit outdoornebraska.gov/mentored-hunts.

In 1996, NGPC and Pheasants Forever developed a program for youth ages 12 to 15 who have recently completed a Hunter Safety Education class to attend a mentored hunt. Participants learn dog training, hunter safety, blue rock shooting, and more. The highlight of the program is a pheasant or dove hunt with an instructor and dog handler. I look forward to enjoying the natural scenery of the Pine Ridge, connecting with friends, and experiencing the thrill of the hunt. One hundred years ago, that wouldn't have been possible. Turkeys had completely disappeared from Nebraska by 1915. Starting in the late 1950s, NGPC led a successful program to reintroduce them—starting in the Pine Ridge. Today, there are turkeys in every county of our state, and Nebraska has become the top turkey hunting destination in the country. Nebraska is also known for our upland game hunting with excellent populations of ring-necked pheasants, bobwhite quail, sharptailed grouse, and greater prairiechickens.

Our state offers over 1.2 million acres of publicly accessible lands, with abundant walk-in hunting opportunities. Each year, NGPC publishes a Public Access Atlas dis-

In addition to hunting, the Good Life has plenty of wide open spaces for hiking, biking, and horseback riding. Capitol View

The end of the nonpartisan Legislature could be in sight

Commentary by J.L. Schmidt Statehouse Correspondent Nebraska Press Association

Plans by a gaggle of Republicans to end secret ballots for legislative committee chairs are nothing short of a power grab, a move that threatens the very nonpartisan nature of the Legislature.

The money behind the move, which is falsely labeled as transparency, comes from a Political Action Committee funded by none other than multi-millionaire Charles Herbster. You remember, he's the guy who lost the Republican gubernatorial nomination to that other millionaire Republican who was supported by the millionaire incumbent Republican governor. Do you see a pattern here?

You'd get transparency all right. The names of every Republican senator who voted for a Democrat -- oh the horror -- because they thought they were a better person for the job, would be public.

That would allow the governor and his loyal followers to openly chastise and fight against anything that turncoat might try. Do you see the threat to a nonpartisan Legislature?

So, let's just give everything to the Republicans, let out a big cheer of "Go Big Red State" and go home. We don't need no stinkin' nonpartisan Legislature. This here is Big Red State country.

Seventeen of Nebraska's state senators have signed the first pledge pushed by Herbster's political action committee vowing to scrap the Legislature's unique system of electing committee chairs by secret ballot. Republicans have sought that change for the nonpartisan body for years.

The list of senators signing wood forest at Indian Cave State onto the pledge from Herbster's Park (Shubert) offers a spectacular Nebraska First PAC include show of colors each fall. State Nebraska Bank & Trust CFO and Vice President Kirby Hall is now a graduate from the Pacific Coast Banking School, Class of 2022. The graduation ceremony was held in Seattle at the University of Washington earlier this month with over 200 graduates from financial institutions across the country.

Founded in 1938, Pacific Coast Banking School (PCBS) offers a graduate-level executive leadership and financial management education over a three-year period in partnership with the Foster School of Business at the University of Washington. Hall began the program in 2019, with a delay in 2020 and only online courses in 2021. This year, she was able to return to the University of Washington's campus for in-person classes.

She is the third employee of State Nebraska Bank & Trust (SNB) to graduate from PCBS, along with Vice President Jason Claussen and CEO Matt Ley.

Hall joined SNB as a Controller in 2014 and worked as a teller during her college years. She graduated from Wayne State College with a bachelor's degree in Public Accounting and Finance and an MBA.

In the community, Hall is busy teaching Sunday School, volunteering for Boomerfest and is a member of the Wayne Kiwanis Club. She serves on the Wayne Basketball Development Association board, participates on the WAED Organizing committee, and volunteers with Wayne Elementary Boosters. She is also a graduate of the Leadership Wayne IX class.

Outside of work, Hall lives in Wayne with her husband, Brandon, and their three children. When they are not attending activities for their children, they try to catch Husker football whenever they can, play cards and board games, and spend time outdoors with the kids.
