Court finds that notice was lawful

WAYNE - District Judge Merritt C. Warren found that proceedings in the closure of the Hoskins school was properly handled, according to court documents.

Judge Warren said in his written findings of case number 7351, that publication notice of the meeting of Wayne County School District No. 9 (Hoskins) was properly handled.

Judge Warren wrote: "That the agenda for such meeting provided reasonable advance notice of the meeting, by four separate references to speakers whose topic was 'school reorganization, and the listing of Dr. James Merritt, Norfolk Public Schools ... complied fully with the requirements of sections 79-402 and 79-402.3 in petitioning to dissolve the Hoskins district and attach the same ... to the Norfolk district, and there is no error in said proceedings."

HE FURTHER found "that the proceedings of the joint Wayne, Madison and Stanton County Reorganization complied with the requirements of the law."

Judge Warren said there is "no error in said proceedings, and the Petition in Error is dismissed, with prejudice, at the costs of the plaintiffs in error."

As a result of the case findings, Hoskins students will be transported into the Norfolk Public Schools or they may petition to be transported into the Winside Public Schools, according to articles published previously in The Wayne Herald.

Neighbors up in arms over condition of house

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

After fighting to get property at 509 Walnut cleaned up, one local neighbor, who asked to remain anonymous, has given up hope.

Others in the area have voiced concerns to council members.

According to attorney Bob Ensz, who legally represents the Wayne City Council, little progress has been made on the location's cleanup. Ensz said when the City Council received nuisance complaints from Al Wiesler in February, he had Police Chief Vern Fairchild check into the situation.

Following a discussion among council members in May, the owner of the property, Mrs. Alma Weiershauser, personally met with Ensz to discuss the matter.

Weiershauser, who has had nuisance complaints on properties she owns on three separate occasions, agreed to have the property cleaned up by Sept. 1. Since her meeting with Ensz, little progress has been seen on the property at 509 Walnut by neighbors.

ENSZ SAID BY the progress officials have seen to this point, it's difficult to tell if Weiershauser will meet the deadline she set.

"All I can say is that we've had other problems with her and she's been slow to respond each time," Ensz said. "It's not that she's refused to do the work, but she's been neglectful in getting things done."

Ensz said of the three filings against Weiershauser, one has gone to court. He said if this instance results in a court appearance, Weiershauser may find herself in a difficult situation.

Fair set for August 2-5

Performances highlight agenda

WAYNE - When the Wayne County Fair kicks off next week, several events are planned in coordination with the fair, according to county fair officials.

This year's fair runs from Thursday, Aug. 2 to Sunday, Aug. 5.

Aside from the annual 4-H events, The Rumbles and the Serendipity Singers will highlight the Thursday and Friday night performances, respectively.

The Rumbles concert on Thursday, Aug. 2 is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. while the Serendipity Singers will perform at 8 p.m. on Friday, Aug. 3.

A new addition to this year's fair is also the agriculture museum located in the Agriculture Hall. Several area farm antique enthusiasts have worked for several months to restore old farm machinery to top form.

The 4-H events look to be shaping up better than 1989, according to data provided by the Wayne County Extension office.

FOR THE 1990 fair, 30 horses have been entered in the 4-H livestock competition where in 1989, 20 horses were entered. Individual sheep entries are also up 10 from 50 in 1989 to 60 in 1990.

Market beef also appears to be on the rise, up 10 from 33 in 1989 to 43 in 1990. Feeder calf competition is up sharply as well from 17 in 1989 to 31 in 1990. Pen of three in 1990 has eight entries listed and in 1989, six entries were made.

Figures show that market beef (individual) in the bonus auction is up five from 15 in 1989 to 20 in 1990 and sheep are up four from 15 in 1989 to 19 in 1990. Swine numbers in the bonus auction remained at 26 entries while market beef (pen of three) dropped one to five entries in 1990.

On Thursday, Aug. 2, which is senior day, judging of exhibits in the 4-H building begins at noon along with the judging of 4-H horses. At 1 p.m. 4-H open class dairy judging will begin along with judging of 4-H rabbits and open class economics.

At 3 p.m. Thursday, 4-H dogs will be judged and at 4 p.m. 4-H dairy goats will be judged. At 6 p.m. open class dairy goats will be judged and as well as all exhibits and booths open to the public.

ON FRIDAY, Aug. 3, which is big barbecue day, 8 a.m. is the time for the judging of 4-H hogs.

Two events highlight the 9 a.m. hour when judging of 4-H open class sheep and judging of 4-H cats, household pets and poultry are scheduled.

At noon, judging for 4-H beef and feeder calf and cow/calf pairs will be held. At 2 p.m. will be the first judging of open class entries when poultry will get a look-see. At 6 p.m. the big barbecue is planned. As in years past, the barbecue will be free, however, there is a gate charge to get onto the fairgrounds.

At 7:15 p.m. 4-H exhibits will be on parade, followed by the community service award presentation. At 8 p.m., the Serendipity Singers will be in concert.

KIDS' DAY IS slated for Saturday, Aug. 4. The market hog show kicks off the days events at 8 a.m. followed by the judging of open class beef at 9 a.m. At 10 a.m. open class rabbits and a sanctioned children's pedal tractor pull — sponsored by Farm Bureau Insurance, will be held.

At 1 p.m., a horseshoe pitching contest, an open class feeder calf show and the antique tractor pull

Golf outing

WSC limited in elderly programs offered

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

Despite offering some classes and programs for retired people, Wayne State College is limited by the number of elderly programs it may offer.

According to Provost Dr. Don Whisenhunt, WSC is limited in the on-campus, low-cost programs it can offer to the elderly because of state funding structures. He added that that doesn't mean something isn't in the works.

Traditionally, offering elderly education programs is the role of a community college. Whisenhunt said community colleges differ from state colleges because the funding structure differs.

He said state colleges are paid for through state tax dollars and student tuition and community colleges are funded through some state tax funds, local tax levies and student tuition.

DESPITE OFFERING some fitness classes for the elderly, talk is generating over developing a local elder-hostel, which would include special designed courses to meet a variety of interests. If the elder hostel occurs, it may come as early as next summer, but no time frame has been established.

"The reason we don't do more is because the cost for these programs would be too high," Whisenhunt said. "We've figured it takes about 15 students for us to break even and just to start up a program, we have to have three times that many people show an interest."

Whisenhunt said the local elder hostel differs from other elder hostels elsewhere in the country. He said since the Wayne area has few attractions which get national attention, a local hostel might be preferable.

"We've had very few people show an interest," he said. "If there's an interest there, people need to voice it to us."

IF A HOSTEL program is developed at Wayne State, Whisenhunt said two things will have to occur: a facility will have to be found for the programs; and outside non-faculty personnel will have to be hired. He said the problem with a

Instructor researching Indian linguistics

By Mark Crist
Managing Editor

Dr. Katherine Rudin is trying to preserve a part of American history that is dying with time — she's working to preserve the native tongue of the Omaha Indians.

Rudin, a language linguistics instructor at Wayne State College, said although the Omaha Indian language is related to the Sioux Indian language and others native to the area, not much research has been done on the Indian dialect.

"Most of the people I work with are 60-80 years old," she said. "As children, they were sent to boarding school and were only taught English. In the last few decades, they've realized the value of passing their language onto younger generations."

ALTHOUGH LEARNING about Omaha dialects are important to Rudin's current work, they stem into much broader research.

Since working on her Ph.D. in linguistics at Indiana University in 1982, Rudin has specifically researched Russian, Bulgarian, Polish and Indian languages to find a common link in linguistic structures. She has also done some research in African languages and European and Asian languages.

"What I'm really interested in is language as a human attribute," she said. "The reason I'm working with Omaha is because it's so different, it makes a good comparison. That may not make sense but one of the purposes of 'linguistic research is to discover the limits of how different human languages can be from each other.'"

ONE OF THE reasons the Omaha Indian language is becoming a thing of the past is because as older generations die, they don't pass on the heritage of their language since they were forced to learn English in the early part of the century.

According to Rudin, Indians were sent to boarding schools around 1890 until the 1930s and were forced to learn English. She said it was the United States' government way of integrating Indians into white culture and teach them "American" ways.

"In some respects, it was successful," she said, "most of today's Indians are not familiar with the old ways."

Currently, Rudin is attempting to describe how the language works. Unlike English, Omaha dialect utilizes different sentence structure which almost appears backwards to English structures.

"It's a long-term project," she said. "I've been working on it for two years. Since I teach full-time, it may take a while to get it finished. Although I've had a couple of works published, I'm no where near finished."

Once she determines how the dialect is structured, she plans to formulate a dictionary in addition to other works so the Omaha Indian language can be taught.

SINCE SHE HAS worked on the project for a few years, she is being funded by the National Science Foundation, the Werner-Gren Foundation and has received considerable support from Wayne State College.

"I just have an interest in languages," she said. "It doesn't matter if it's from Europe, Africa, Asia or Indian. I just enjoy doing this kind of work."

Woman's Club helps Carroll blossom

THE VILLAGE OF Carroll is blossoming in color thanks to the efforts of the Carroll Woman's Club. Earlier this year, Woman's Club members voted to take on a project of beautifying a vacant lot in downtown Carroll that had been the site of the Carroll centennial garden. Since then, the area had become overgrown with perennials and weeds. Woman's Club members serving on the committee to beautify the area included, top photo, seated from left, Joyce Sandahl, chairman, Ruth Kerstine and Doris Harmer. Not pictured is Jacque Owens. With a generous donation from Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Olauson of South Carolina in memory of their daughter, Nina Olauson Nelson, the committee purchased a sundial and pedestal, birdbath, benches, decorative fence and posts, trees, shrubs and lava rock. The sundial was placed in an area in the community's park, photo at left. Also decorating both the park area and former centennial garden are petunias purchased by the club. LeRoy Nelson hauled in rocks and Morrie Sandahl assisted the committee in laying brick.

House

Ensz said a court would order the situation abated which would force Weiershauser to fix up the property and if she fails to take action following a court order, the city could go in and level the property.

Ensz said he asked her why she didn't either fix up the property and rent it or sell it for what it's worth, but he said Weiershauser has turned those options down.

THE CITY CODE which establishes nuisance property reads as follows: "any unsightly building or any old, abandoned or partially destroyed building which are either a fire hazard, menace to the public health and safety or are so unsightly as to depreciate the value of the property in the vicinity thereof."

Ensz said Fairchild found that the property fell under at least two of those categories and possibly more.

Additionally, city records show that there has been no electrical power provided to the house since June 12, 1987, which is believed to be the last time the house was occupied.

Today, it sits with most of its windows broken out, wooden steps in front of the house almost rotted out and structural problems with the porch.

"Who knows?" Ensz said. "She may go in Aug. 30 and have the property fixed up by Sept. 1 but by her progress we're not anticipating that."

hostel program is that it's usually too expensive for people to pay.

"We can't just generally give rate-breaks to students because our tuition is determined by the

Farm income may fall under new bill

AREA - Passage of the 1990 Farm Bill with nominal - before inflation - target prices kept at the 1990 level for the 1991-95 period "will result in real net farm income that averages six percent to eight percent less than under the 1985 Farm Bill," according to University of Nebraska agricultural economist Roy Frederick.

The problem, Frederick said, is that if inflation continues at the four percent to five percent level annually, the "real," or inflation-adjusted level of support, will decline by 20 percent to 25 percent by 1995.

Target prices apply to corn, sorghum, barley, oats and what, which combined account for about 35 percent of Nebraska's gross income from agriculture. Most of the balance of gross income comes from the red meat sector, soybeans and dairy production, Frederick explained.

The prediction of inflation-eroded support levels assumes that crop yields and crop bases under the government farm program will not be increased, as bills in both the Senate and House currently suggest, Frederick said.

"Crop producers can partially overcome the effects of stable target prices, program yields and crop bases by some increase in actual yields, reduced acreage reduction requirements and somewhat higher nonrecourse loan rates," Frederick conceded.

"I expect all these to happen," the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources public policy specialist said, "but it won't be enough to overcome the effect of stable target prices and higher expenses caused by inflation."

Net income from the feed grains and wheat is expected to decline by 15 percent to 20 percent by 1995, assuming normal weather conditions and no big changes in international trading opportunities, Frederick continued.

Soybean producers will continue to have only a price support - not the income support provided by target prices, the economist pointed out. While it appears that the loan rate for soybeans might be increased from $4.53 per bushel to the $5-$5.50 range, the market price has been above even the $5.50 level during recent years, except for brief periods of time, Frederick said.

"Therefore," he said, "soybean producers' use of the loan has been sporadic at best. In short, heavy reliance on soybean loans in the $5-$5.50 range in the next few years will mean lower overall return to producers than they've had under the 1985 (current) Farm Bill," he warned.

"I don't see the soybean loan rate raising average soybean prices by more than five percent on a pre-inflation basis. On a real, or inflation-adjusted basis, soybean producers would be no better off by 1995 than they are at present."

Livestock production, which accounts for 60 percent to 65 percent of gross income in Nebraska agriculture, would not be affected greatly by the new Farm Bill, Frederick said, unless feed grain prices dropped enough to make the slightly higher loan rates come into play.

It's conceivable, he analyzed, that fewer acres would be taken out of crop production, which would increase slightly the cost of grazing and hay for beef producers. "Overall, I don't expect to see much change in income - at the most a percentage point or two - for livestock producers because of the new Farm Bill," Frederick said.

In summary, he said, "the decline in real farm income will be greater in 1995 than in 1991, because of stable target prices and inflation-driven increases in expenses."

"It's a mixed bag for the various commodity groups, but basically on the down side: wheat and feed grain producers would be hurt the most; livestock producers might be hurt slightly. Soybean producers would stay about the same or even be helped a bit in the early years of the bill's existence."

Assuring nutrient intake a balancing act

by Darlene Martin, Nutritionist NU Northeast Research and Development Center

CONCORD - Clearly, human beings have a lot of experience with eating. An adequate intake of all required nutrients provides the basis for optimal health. But, assuring an adequate nutrient intake can be a balancing act of eating the variety of foods that will supply the needed nutrients while not giving us too much fat, sodium and calories.

Recent studies show that Americans are exceeding the recommended amounts for sodium, fats and simple sugars. However, moderation does not mean totally giving up these items. The solution to lasting dietary changes is making small, gradual changes in your food selections.

Picture your diet undivided into meals or snacks, as a whole unit for the day. If you do go overboard on too much fats, simple sugars, sodium or calories counterbalance at your next meal or the next day.

Don't just give up trying to eat a balanced diet. It is the total at the end of the day that counts.

To illustrate a varied and balanced diet, foods usually are grouped by the nutrients they contain. These nutrients are usually classified into five food groups. The four major groups are: 1. breads, cereals and grain products, 2. fruits and vegetables, 3. milk, cheese and yogurt, 4. meat, poultry, fish and meat alternatives. The fifth group, fats, sweets and alcoholic beverages, provides many calories but few nutrients.

The four food groups can appear quite rigid, but are really flexible once understood. For example, cheese can be substituted for milk because cheese will supply about the same amount of protein, calcium and riboflavin as milk. When substituting, remember if you are trying to reduce fat and calorie intake, select low fat or skim milk and low fat cheeses. One cup of whole milk supplies 150 calories while one cup of skim milk supplies only 80 calories.

Reading labels and keeping necessary staple foods in your kitchen cabinet helps you be able to prepare nutritious and healthful meals. Some of these staple items should be of the quick preparation variety so you can fix nutritious meals at the last minute. When we are in a hurry we tend to give up foods from the four major food groups for those in the fifth group, such as candy bars, chips and fast food type items.

The ingredient label does not list how much of each item is in the container, but items are listed by weight. The ingredient with the most weight is listed first. Be mindful, "hidden items" can be listed in different forms.

For example, if the first three listed ingredients of a food item are sugar, dextrose and flour, this means that the first two ingredients are sugars and far outweigh the flour. Sugar can be listed as sucrose, glucose, dextrose, sorbitol, mannitol, maltose, fructose, besides the obvious ones such as corn syrup, honey, molasses and brown sugar.

The same is true for sodium. Look for words such as "sodium, salt" or "soda". Sodium is high in meat tenderizers, cured meats, bouillon, baking powder, soy sauces, pickles, olives and relishes.

Additional information is available from University of Nebraska home economists in local Cooperative Extension offices or from registered dietitians.

YARD OF THE MONTH

This contest is sponsored by Country Nursery Lawn Service of Wayne and judged by an independent group of observers.

Despite spending little time on their lawn, Betsy and Don Whisenhunt are pleased with its appearance.

Betsy says there's little reason not to be because they use Country Nursery Lawn Service.

"It's something neither of us spend any time on but when someone tells us we have a nice lawn, I tell them it's because of Country Nursery. That sounds like an ad, but I give them all the credit," Betsy said.

The Whisenhunts have used Country Nursery for six years. Betsy said aside from watering the lawn about six hours a week, and having Scott and Todd Fuelberth mow it, they put very little effort into its appearance. "They (Country Nursery) do a good job," she said.
