Hancock.

Sept. 1, 1885.

Don Wayne Herald-Tribune.

You have often asked for correspondence from each precinct in the county and as no one has written from this part of the county for some time I will try and send you a few items.

In the first place this is the most unfavorable fall for haying—not dry enough for successful work and not wet enough to do any good.

Corn in this part of the county is not all out of the way of Jack frost, but might have been had we had ripening weather.

Small grain is nearly all thrashed,

and the yield is large and the quality good, except a few pieces troubled with smut. Farmers had better not care about letting their cattle eat much straw that contains this smut, it is dangerous especially for cows kept for breeding purposes.

The Republican Central Committee

met at the Wayne ring the hardship that has yet been given it when they arranged the representation of delegates to the county convention.

And yet the way the Gazette man suppose he is not fighting the ring.

It is generally understood in these parts that Wayne precinct was intentionally made large to contain votes enough to control the outcome under the supposition that the town of Wayne could control the precinct (which she does)

The Republican Central Committee

gave the town of Wayne all the delegates she is entitled to, and as the balance of the precinct never gets any representation any way, the central committee has seen fit not to give them any delegates. The remedy for this is to divide Wayne precinct into about three

precincts, then that part of the county

would have the same representation

without being controlled by two or three wire pullers.

Will the Gazette tell us what is being done with the sinking fund reported on hand, and why the interest on these

$1,000 bonds are not paid? Why do our county dues not pay off the county liabilities? Will we not have to divide Wayne precinct into about three

precincts, then that part of the county

would have the same representation

without being controlled by two or three wire pullers.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

A good deal of hay has been spoiled

by the wet weather.

Spring chickens 10 cents a pound at Henry Goff's.

From Martin was the train that was wrecked at Blair last week but was not hurt.

Not a particle of quinine nor any ness. Warranted.

Atty. Welch and Moore have moved to the front rooms over the Citizens

Bank, Mr. Fuller occupies the office vacated by Welch, and W. M. Weight is in this office, instead of Mr. Moore.

The recent cold, wet weather had permitted the corn to ripen fast, and there is some danger that frost may come before the crop is thoroughly ripe. We need a couple of weeks of clear warm weather.

Henry Lee doesn't think it quite the thing to tell how he smashed his thumb, and then say nothing about the editor going down cellar head first through an open trap door, but he should remember that editors are proverbially

a modest sort of people and don't care to mention them.

Editor Gazette: Having been informed by Mr. Thomas Steele that his opponent, Charles Johnson, was an intemperate man and had signed the bond of Beardshear & Campbell,

one of our salaried keepers in Wayne,

I write to require of you if these statements are true.

GEN. A. CULVER.

To both of these queries we can emphatically answer NO. We have been acquainted with Mr. Johnson from boyhood a matter of 35 years and have never known, or heard of his being under the influence of alcoholic stimulants during that time.

Can Mr. Steele say as much for himself? As to the second query, the lie with reference to signing the bond, has been freely circulated through this city, and we have had many personal inquiries with reference thereto.

Suffice it to say that Mr. Johnson's name is not on the bond, which is signed by our senior editor, as village clerk, in the Gazette office and any person still having doubts upon the subject is invited to call and inspect the bond, also the one given the year before. Tom must indeed be in dependent straits when he resorts to such self evident falsehood to bolster up his waning cause.—Gazette.

We know of no particular reason why this matter should have been brought up for discussion, but as it has been the whole truth will probably be the best under the circumstances.

Mr. Johnson has been a member of the village council for the past two years and consequently could not have signed the bond had he wished. The saloon bond for 1883, on file in the county clerk's office, is signed by E.

Carnell, H. H. Boyd, Chas. Johnson

and J. Brod, the license for that year being taken out in the name of E.

Carnell, instead of Beardshear & Carnell, for reasons well known to most people in Wayne, but which it is not necessary to mention. Mr. Culver, we believe, is an earnest and con-

Alex. Scott is again in charge of the Farmers' Hotel, the parties who had taken charge of it finding they had a bigger contract on hand than they could manage.

It is said that the soap men who took in the crowd so easily here last Saturday are fishing for smokers at Wakefield and landed two hundred dollars worth of them yesterday.

The street commissioner has been doing some more grading on north Main street. He also deserves the thanks of the community for getting down a few acres of grass and weeds in the streets.

There will be a communion season held at the Lutheran church next Tuesday at 11 a. m. Also preaching on Saturday at 8 p. m. German at 10 a. m. and Sunday at 10 a. m. The reader is cordially invited.

A. P. Childs editor of the Gazette has sent T. J. Steele for libel, claiming two thousand dollars damage for the injury to his reputation caused by the publication of the letter in the Herald-Tribune last week.

An awkward mistake of the competitor and some careless proof reading in the notice of the Tolinger Oxford wedding last week made us so that the friends of the bride groom, instead of the friends of the bride and groom, as it was written. Mrs. Tolinger will please pardon us for the blunder.

Britton & Crane sold a special price of fifty dollars for the last few days on exhibits, at the fair of the last day, Oct. 30th. The premiums will be three in number, $25 to first, $15 to second, $10 to third, the judge to be chosen by the owners of the exhibits.

J. H. Johnson, the furniture man was notified by the marshal Saturday evening, to keep the sidewalk in front of his place of business clear of goods and other obstructions. The notice was given on complaint of some one we suppose, but we can really see no good reason for it. As every other business man in town, Mr. Johnson receives and delivers goods that for a short time he is forced to crowd the walks somewhat, but not to such an extent as to inconvenience any one. If any of our business men wish to use a few feet of the sidewalk to display their goods, why not let them do it? Our streets are not so crowded with travel that there is any need of being so particular about it.

The village council should refuse to license such bare faced swindlers as the soap game this week. A crowd of about two hundred dollars on the street last Saturday. It is all well enough to see the village council men in a hurry, but when a glib talker offers ten dollars for one there are plenty of dollars who will bite. The village council should be careful when for ten dollars it will give a racial allowance to rob its citizens. Let us have no more of it. During fair week there will probably be dozens of applications for license for various reasons. Not a single one should be granted. We understand that the granting of permits on the fair ground will be left to the general supervision of the board. If such is the case there will be no friends of the kind there; we hope there will be none in the village.

The Wayne base ballers are playing a game with the Wakefield club at the Wakefield fair grounds this afternoon.

Mr. Scott has in contemplation extensive improvements to the Farmers hotel that will make it one of the best in northern Nebraska.

Chas. H. Johnson has placed his order for a carload of furniture to arrive about Oct. 10th. New styles, low prices, and a choice assortment to select from, will be the inducements. Wait for it, it will pay you.

A car load of sturgeonfish from Sturgeon, Ill., came in last evening and are being shown over the country today by our real estate man. The excursion was accompanied by L. D. Clay, of LeMars, Iowa, an energetic real estate man who worked it up.

Judge Martin presided over a last night's court, but had no business interest for the real estate man. A. A. Hardy brought suit against F. A. Cattermole claiming a commission on a land sale, the point being that while the attorney used the sale, Hardy brought the parties together. The plaintiff got judgment for the amount claimed. Welsh plaintiff. Northrop for defendant.

School opened Monday morning with about 100 pupils in attendance.

The members will be largely increased in a short time. Prof. McCoy takes charge of the high school, Mr. Howard of the Grammar department, Miss Baird of the intermediate and Miss Sprague of the primary. The new department makes the grading much better, and Prof. McCoy informs us that the prospects for a good crop are excellent.

We have heretofore been optimistic as to the moon having anything to do with the weather, but our skepticism is somewhat shaken. During the recent unpleasant weather the advocates of the moon theory insisted that when the moon shined the weather would be good, and sure enough the hour of the change brought the first glimpse of it and it has been improving ever since.

The above is a pretty good showing even for this productive country and the Herald-Tribune extends its heartiest congratulations to the parents and all. We hope that the example set, prove contagious and that many others will go and do likewise. This county must be settled up, and a native population to the manor born is to be most desired. Keep it up.

Church Dedication.

The best, neatest, and most comfortable church, found in Dakota, D. T., in Wayne county, was consecrated on Sunday, about 21 miles west of Dakota City in Dakota county. The house cost $10,000. A debt of $700 remained on the property on the day of dedication. In a short time over $500 were subscribed. The people of the Dakota county bottom, with their active pastor, Rev. L. Baird, deserve great credit for this noble and successful effort. It is an honor to them and will no doubt prove a great blessing to the large community. The whole community have nobly invested of their means in the erection of this church, and will reap a grand and glorious reward.

Rev. J. S. Detweiler of Omaha and Rev. C. H. Schorn of Wayne preached to large and interesting audiences several days last week. Rev. S. B. Barnitz, Western secretary of the Lutheran church, was present over the Sabbath, Sept. 23rd, and rendered a beautiful service at this place of dedication.

Rev. John who serves the Germans in that valley and at Ponca, and Rev. Zimmerman, of Dakota city, were also participants. May Heaven's richest spiritual blessings now also abide with those laborers in the Master's vineyard.

G. H. Schorn.

Farmers are looking blue around here now on account of too much rain and cold weather to suit them, and fear of root catching their corn before it is ripe.

W. L. Fox, hardware dealer of Wakefield, visited Sunday with his sister, Mrs. J. P. Wright.

Mr. Dodge was in town on Monday in not a very good humor, the cause for which was that two of the hunting party that was driven out by a late Howser fired off their guns in too close proximity to where he was moving, frightening his mules and causing them to run away and break up his new mow in a bad shape. He says the money don't come to him easy enough to enjoy such things and that he feels like some one else ought to foot the bill.

We missed L. T. Reed's smiling face from the door of the mail car on Tuesday morning and supposed Democratic lightning had downed him, but learned on inquiry that he was laid off by sickness, we hope to see him again soon.

We folks away off here in the west end of the county had some to the conclusion some time ago that there were more men than thousand miles from Wayne that were making fools of themselves in the way they were conducting the matter of the merits of some certain parties for certain places, and let me say right here that there has been such a thing as a dark horse winning the race by just such foolishness and such a thing may happen in Wayne county in Oct. 1883.

Look a little on boys we have heard some things among de Dutch."

Some of the drift of us have concluded that J. P. W. was not so badly off about ordering the overcoat after all. The worst of it is that it has not arrived yet.

A tramp printer who has been all over California and Oregon struck this town Tuesday night and to hear him and some of our townsmen who have been there tell of the beauties of that country and its climate it would make a fellow think that he would rather be a resident of that country in poverty and rags than to dwell in the halls of luxury and plenty in this land of snow storms and cyclones.

J. H. Johnson, the furniture man was notified by the marshal Saturday evening, to keep the sidewalk in front of his place of business clear of goods and other obstructions. The notice was given on complaint of some one we suppose, but we can really see no good reason for it. As every other business man in town, Mr. Johnson would have to necessarily obstruct the walks somewhat, but not to such an extent as to inconvenience any one. If any of our business men wish to use a few feet of the sidewalk to display their goods, why not let them do it? Our streets are not so thronged with travel that there is any need of being so particular about it.

We have heretofore been sceptical as to the moon having anything to do with the weather, but our scepticism is somewhat shaken. During the recent unpleasant weather the advanced theory indicated that when the moon changed we would have good weather, and sure enough the hour of the change brought the first glimpse of it and it has been improving ever since.

We have heard of example may prove contagious and that many others will go and do likewise. This county must be settled up and a native population "to the manner born" is to be most desired. Keep it up.

Church Dedication.

The best, newest, and finest church found in Dakota, Dixon or Wayne counties, was consecrated on Sunday, about 31 miles west of Dakota City (Dakota county). The house cost $15,000, a debt of $100 remained to be paid on the day of dedication. In a short time over $500 were subscribed. The people of the Dakota county bottom, with their active pastor, Rev. C. Baird, deserve great credit for this noble and successful effort. It is an honor to them and will no doubt prove a great blessing to the large community. The whole community has nobly interested itself in the erection of this church, and will reap a grand and glorious reward.

Rev. J. S. Detweiler of Omaha and Rev. G. H. Schur of Wayne, preached to large and interesting audiences several days last week. Rev. S. R. Barnhart, Western secretary of the Lutheran church, was present over the last week, and rendered valuable services at this feast of dedication. Rev. Sick who serves the Germans in that valley and at Ponca, and Rev. Zimmerman, of Dakota City were also present. We are sure that May Heaven's richest spiritual blessings now also abide with those laborers in the Master's vineyard.

We folks away off here in the west end of the county had come to the conclusion some time ago that there were some men in a thousand miles from Wayne that were making fools of themselves in the way they were conducting the matter of the merits of some certain parties for certain places, and let me say right here that there has been such a thing as a dark horse winning the race by just such foolishness and such a thing may happen in Wayne county in Oct. 1886. So look a little out boys we have heard some of the dring among de Dutch."

A tramp printer who has been all over California and Oregon struck this town Tuesday night and to hear him and some of our townsmen who have been there tell of the beauties of that country and its climate it would make a fellow think that he would rather be a resident of that country in poverty and rags than to dwell in the halls of luxury and plenty in this land of snow storms and cyclones.

He flew upon the breeze full of life,
A slender youth in slender dress,
The thoughts in dreams are wandering wide,
Yet still by earth's trocible ties.
For one who has seen the light
Thus lonely hold the shades of night?

Behind a cloud enshrouded on high,
Fair Idun leaves in meadow thought,
The sun is shining in the night,
Though by immortal lovers sought,
Was it she leaved her cloud to night,
Endymion saw a vision so bright.

Was it his love's a secret so true,
The fair young queen's robes and pale,
That heir her self desired the vale,
And thus by his own hand he fell,
Till lips that "ever" kisse human bliss
Have tasted an immortal's kiss.

Love makes her choice, we know not why,
Thus love will ever find his own,
And thus by his own hand he fell,
Or reaching up to heights unknown
From his lowly state he fell,
When the beauteous Endymion.

BY LLA WHOLESEN WILCOX.

From the New York Mercury.

When Milton Stanley sent up his card to Alice Hall that morning, agitated to ask that young lady to be his wife before he left the house.

—He had reached that stage of ennui which comes to every man with a soul who lives a life of license and freedom into the thirties. The apples of Sod om turned to ashes in his hands, and every pleasure palled upon him. He had decided that marriage, being the only experiment he had not yet tried, was the one pathway to happiness left open to him.

Y. Yet, when he left the house half an hour later, he had not asked her the momentous question and mentally thanked the fates that he had not. She was not the woman for him.

The fact was, when Miss Hall came down to greet him, she had returned the pressure of his hand by a gentle yet warm clasp of her own, and she had taken a seat beside him on the divan. She had never before been guilty of such familiarity, and although he came with the unspoken intention

Now, like every man who has lived a life of absolute freedom, who has tasted of every pleasure and broken all the commandments, Milton Stanley demonstrated the most unhesitating and strictest observance of every rule of propriety in the conduct of a woman. He had tempted innumerable women to acts of impropriety and then de-

"They are all alike—weak, frail, vain," he sometimes said, and then pausing, remembered his sainted mother, and added: "No, there must be some difference between the bride, whom Providence intended to lead up into a heaven of pure love and peace."

Ah, yes, that was what he wanted. Some one to lead up to whom the gas of man had sorely fallen; some unspiciated embodiment of all the feminine virtues, devoid of all the weaknesses of her sex, who should take him, wear him, and be restrained as he was, and lead him into heaven.

And it never occurred to him that such a union would be transmissible—no,

As he went down the steps leading from Miss Hall's home, he felt a sense of anger and humiliation to think he had been so easily deceived into a confession of love by a woman who had so many memories connected with any man which could cause her to blush and look ashamed at the mention of his name. He had been so easily deceived that he had been into the presence of any women—hosts of them.

He rushed down to the seashore the next day, to a quiet place, where he would not be vexed by the sight of any of his friends. He had been so deceived that he had been into the presence of any women—hosts of them.

He did not know a soul and meant to make no acquaintances aside from the fishes on "Blue Fish Point."

But before he had been at Sunrise Bay twenty-four hours he changed his mind.

He met two ladies walking slowly on him; on a delicate, refined-looking girl in her late teens. The latter did not look at him, the former did.

"The girl is a very handsome girl, but never a face which attracts him," he said, after he went to his hotel. "Who was she?"

"He was not long in finding out."

"Mrs. O. R. Mills and Miss Delphine Mills," remarked the hotel porter, who brought the register said. "A little inquiry brought to light the fact that Mrs. Mills was the wealthy widow of a well-known member of the New York bar. Ever since his death, three years ago, she has been traveling all over the world. The widow and daughter have been abroad. They had but recently returned. The young lady was in delicate health, but was highly accomplished and very amiable."

This Milton proved to be less than the truth are long. He obtained an introduction, afterwards himself and slowly made his way into the good graces of the mother. The daughter had observed to visiting him, and he had been able to win her to his disposition to entertain calls.

But Mrs. Mills observed her daughter's treachery finally.

"What," she asked, "did you confide to Milton," "to be brought out of her confidence?" She has brooded constantly over her father's death until she has become morose and suspicious. I am sure the suspicion of an aggressive gentleman will do her good."

Delphi's reluctance to meet him on the course increased Milton's interest in her. In the first interview he had, and in the first few interviews added fuel to the fire she had already kindled in his heart. He was really in love with the girl. He had been married once and asked her if he might try to win Delphi as his wife.

Mrs. Mills could scarcely conceal her delight. She had investigated Milton's social standing and financial condition and found him a most desirable husband for her daughter. "But you must approach Delphine most carefully," she said. "She is strangely averse to the attentions of gentlemen, and has a queer idea that she will never marry. You can of course win her if you are patient. I am sure no woman could resist you. But you may spoil all if you are too bold. Remember how shattered her life has been. We sent her abroad with a champagne year before her father's death, to be educated. Poor child! since his death she has not been in society at all of course; so she really is a most unsophisticated child, quite unlike most American girls of twenty."

All this sweet music to Milton's ears. Fate had sent him the very ideal of his dreams at last. How delicious would be his task of teaching that sweet girl the lessons of love.

He sent her flowers and books, and delicate dishes to tempt her appetite, and, in the end, he came, remaining for her sake himself for days. Then he joined herself and her mother on the beach, and begged permission to read aloud to them from a new book he had just procured.

And slowly the winning spell of Delphine began to watch for his coming and yet also often refused to see him when he came. Her shyness grew with her interest, and Milton was more and more charmed.

One day, as he sat alone amidst the freshening to a young woman like your daughter," he said to Mrs. Mills. "I really cannot curb my impatience longer. I must know my fate."

Delphie came into the room as he spoke. Her mother drew her to his side.

"Delphie," she said, "Mr. Stanley has something to say to you. You know my wishes. Now let nothing influence you but your own heart—remember, your own heart. Nothing else is to be considered for one moment."

Afterwards Milton recalled the strange manner in which those words were said.

Mrs. Mills left them alone. For the first time in his life Milton Stanley found himself trembling with fear in the presence of a woman.

He stepped back of the chair in which she had seated herself.

"Miss Mills, Delphie," he said, with a tremulous voice, "I have to tell you that I am engaged to another person."

She was trembling from head to foot. He took her hands in his and bent down and looked in her face. "You do love me?" he said. "Yes," she answered almost in a whisper. "Yes, but I don't love you." He caught her to his heart. "You need say no more," he cried. "You are mine." At that moment Mrs. Mills returned. They were married a few months later. Milton saw but little of his sweetheart in the meantime, save in the presence of her mother. Chas. as he might at this strict observance of are so dear. I love you so," and after a dose she ceased to weep and seemed very happy.

They went into society and she was very popular and much admired, and Milton was the proudest; as well as the happiest of men.

Allice Hall had gone abroad almost at once after Milton Stanley's marriage. She returned a year later.

"The two women met at a Mrs. Egbert's reception. It was Milton Stanley's first meeting with Miss Hall also, since that morning call. He remembered it, and thanked the fate manfully for saving him from the folly he so nearly committed. His heart swelled with love and pride as he looked at her, and, with the same softness as he had at first, he struck as Miss Hall "but she was a woman to love and trust."

"I met a friend of a friend of yours while abroad, Mrs. Stanley," she said smiling amiably as only a woman can when she is preparing to stab another.

"Indeed!" Mrs. Stanley responded and waited for Miss Hall to continue.

"Yes. The gentleman said he knew of you through his friend. He was

She paused, and here we entered upon Mrs. Stanley's last, bitter standstill. She was opposed upon both fronts. The expression of Miss Hall's was not pleasant to her. There was a strange look, too, in Delphi's eyes. "You mean," she said, "that I am the person to whom you refer, Miss Hall?" Delphi said, quietly and coldly:

"Miss Hall smiled. 'No, you need not be alarmed. I am not speaking of you at all in my memory. With new associates one forgets old friends somewhat, you know. I mean Count Lancaster's young daughter.'"

Every particle of color left Delphi's face as Miss Hall pronounced this name. But her voice was steady as she replied, "I remember Albert Lynde very well. He is the eldest child of the family, and he died three years ago."

"Yes, I know. My friend, August Merriam, told me all about it. How Then turning to Mr. Stanley she said "It was very sad, was it not?" Of course Mrs. Stanley has told you all about it? Yes, no doubt it was Fate, and kind Fate for you." Then Miss Hall moved away to another part of the room.

Milton Stanley looked at his wife full in the eyes without speaking for a second. Her face was snow white, but her glance did not quail, though there was a shadow in it.

"Are you ready to go home?" she asked wearily.

"Certainly, if you desire to go," he answered coldly.

No word was spoken on that home-ward drive. It seemed interminable to both husband and wife.

As they entered their bright, warm parlors, the delicate, stately woman

"Will you sit down?" she answered, not inviting him to a seat.

"No," he said, "I will never sit down in this house again until this is explained satisfactorily. If my house is disgraced I never want to sit down under its roof again."

"I have brought indignities to you," she answered, with a red spot flaming into her cheeks.

"I should have forgone you, perhaps. I should have told you I meant to tell you—but I was overruled."

"Go on," he said.

She drew a long breath. "I was so young—only sixteen"—she began when I was sent abroad with a chaplain—a lady who had three young girls in charge. We were to be educated in Paris. Albert Lancaster was on the ship. He was young and handsome and he selected me as the representative object of his admiration. I was still a girl at his age, and, indeed, I was not far off at my age might have been. I never expected to see him again after we left the ship. But one day, a few months later, he met us as we were out taking our daily exercise under the supervision of a teacher. He bowed and smiled. I only blushed in return. Every week after that for several months he would manage to meet us.

One day he came close behind us and pressed a note in my hand. I read it when alone in my room. It was a respectful note, begging me to correspond with him. He desired to make my acquaintance honorably, as he had been unable to forget me since that sad voyage. I was full of romance and folly, as most young girls are. I heard all my companions talking of love and marriage; and my young admirer seemed to me the Prince of Love. I received a note and I dreamed of him day and night. At last he planned an elopement. I was to meet him at a certain time and place and we were to be married; and I would then be Lady Lancaster and live in an enchanted palace all my life. The very day I was to meet him I received a telegram announcing my father's death, and the next my brother's that my lover had been killed in a stephanchase the very same morning.

"This is all the story, Milton.

have been foolish, but not guilty of any sin. I have lived to see how great my error would have been had I made that foolish marriage. It would have broken my parents' hearts instead of making them proud of my brilliant alliance, as I imagined. And it would have ruined my life. "You have ruined mine," Milton said, coldly. All my life I had an ideal. A woman, spotless as snow, who had never loved, who was above deception, and whose name had never been associated with that of any man. I believed I had found her in you. I married you under this delusion. I have been a proud and happy man. I have been a fool, a blind fool, to believe you were the woman I had worshiped I gave you. You have deceived me from first to last. It was a carefully planned scheme of yours and "I have not sinned," Delphine answered, in a slow voice.

"César's wife must be above suspicion," he replied.

Suddenly she arose and faced him. She was very white and her eyes flashed with a fire he never saw in them before. Her rich wraps fell from her shoulders and her jewels glistened in the daylight. She looked like some enraged princess.

"I, too, had an ideal once," she said, "a man too noble to stoop to frivolity, with a will too mighty to permit him to have been guilty of any act which I might not commit. I loved you; you sought me in spite of my reluctance to make your acquaintance. You insisted, you almost compelled me to love you. I did love you. My mother was your ally—I confess it. But do you know how she prevailed on me to accept you as my husband, without telling you the one folly of my life? It was in this way: She had investigated your history, and she told me of certain events in your life, events which crimsoned my cheek with shame while I listened, and caused me to lie and weep through nights of sleepless agony. I did not believe in possible that a man who seemed so noble, so refined as you, could have given rein to his baser nature even to this extent? But I had idealized you, you were not what I had thought you were. You were not worse than other men, that I would never find my ideal in morality and that if I loved you, I would have to love you as I loved my poor hand. She had brought me the most convincing proofs of your nature. My own sudden spotless honesty was not the only thing I had compared with your own sin-stained "saves." I said, I love him well enough to be his wife, knowing all this from other people's hands, and I would have been there him in the natural world. I love me well enough to overlook it. I forgive so much he will forgive so little. That I overestimated the strength of my love. I thought that my judgment was a man."

She paused, and Milton stood silent and ashamed before the beauty of the

He had always fancied that his wife was ignorant of his past. Not to suddenly learn that she had married him with a full knowledge of those years of reckless folly and disgraceful adventures covered him with shame for himself and admiration for the woman who could forgive so much, who could love so much.

She had known it all this time, and yet never had referred to it once, and now pity and manly self-respect bewilder him. The sense of wronged love, the feeling of overwhelming gratitude and love. He looked up and reached out his arms.

"Delude you ever forgive me?" he cried.

"Can you ever love me again?" She sprang into his embrace, and How French Women Dress.—The chief point to note about the dress of a Parisian woman, no matter what her station in life may be, is its appropriateness. She does not wear as costly garments usually as the American of the same social class, but they are always thoroughly suitable to her position and to the occasion in which they are to be worn. A French elegant, for instance, will neither go shopping in a velvet costume nor to a wedding or official reception in a cloth jacket or cashmere gown. She never goes out on foot in uppers and chaps, nor appears at a ball in a dark, simple, sensible dress, and she will long sleeves. Etiquette forbids her revealing even the most intimate of her gentlemen friends in her morning dress though this rule has been relaxed lately in favor of the very superb morning toilets of brocade and satin and lace, which have been concocted for morning wear by the leading Parisian dressmakers. These, however, are simply exquisite toilets for morning wear. And she, who has no desire to go out on foot she dons the simplest of costumes in dark cloth, or cashmere. Her purse or her desires may make it and the same may be said of the dress in which she receives callers on her "at-home" day. Her theater bonnet much more showy and dressy than her visiting one. For street wear she dons a bonnet of very dark velvet or felt. In the matter of

Gen. Grant and Prince Bismarck.
Berlin Letter to Boston Herald

I asked the Crown Prince if he saw much of Grant when in Berlin, and his reply was: "Yes and no," and then he added that, while he saw him, several times, he had not seen him often enough." It was difficult to find him at his hotel," said Fritz, "as he was always out sight-seeing when not attending receptions or returning official calls."

I remember quite a military scandal that occurred while he was here. The officers and men on duty at the different places had strict orders to treat him with all possible respect. The sentries, turning out the guard, etc. But the sentries got it into their heads that the ex-president of the United States would go about in great style in an open coach, like a sovereign, whereas he was almost always on foot, and seldom accompanied by more than one or two persons. Well, the day he first came to see me he sauntered along Union street in a very simple way, and the sentries just about trimmed the wheels doors but they saw him. Even then they did not know him, and perhaps would not have saluted him at all had it not been for the joyful opening of the doors by the valet who had been watching for his coming. Then the two soldiers came to a present, General Grant threw away his cigar, lifted his hat to them and pressed their hands. The captain of the guard, when he heard of this incident was wild with rage and chagrin. He went so far as to punish one of the sentries, and for this he was reprimanded in general orders. What most struck me was Grant's utter disregard for all things pertaining to the army. I had some trouble in inducing him to permit me to give him a review of some of the garrison troops.

No English peer or peeress can be arrested for debt, need serve on juries or be called out in militia, and they do not swear on oath, but on honor except when witnesses in any court. They can sit in any court in England with their hats on, can wear a sort of uniform as peers, can carry arms, but not in their pockets, and, if they commit treason or felony, they must be tried by their peers.

The increase in the value of property in the business section of Boston during the past fifty years is shown in the recent sale of the United States Custom House, at the corner of Tremont and Temple place. The Masons purchased the land in 1880 for $13,000, and in 1935 completed, making a total cost of land and building of $240,000. In 1958 the United States Government bought it for $105,000, and in 1983 sold it for $255,000.

Trains on the Chicago, Vincennes and Cairo Railroad tell a wonderful story concerning the falling of a giant meteor in a field near the railroad at New Burnside, Johnson county, Ill. The weight of the meteor is estimated to have been a ton and a half, and it was buried in a deep ground crater. The phenomenon excited the devotion of the village to a high degree, and created a great sensation. Hundreds of people visited the spot.

Recently workmen on the Northern Pacific Railroad, near South Prairie, Washington Territory, came upon a fir log eight feet in diameter fifty-six feet below the surface of the ground. It was in a soft state, but after being exposed to the air for a short time became as hard as a stone. The grain of the fir wood remains plainly to be seen, but in color it might easily be taken for walnut. While the woods were yet soft some made pipes of it which after hardening became very handsome.

The idea that "fortunes are made in Florida without sweat or the brow," is justly characterized by the New York Journal of Commerce as "A Fiction in the Speculators," and the writer believes it could be demonstrated that a good apple orchard pays a larger interest than the best orange grove. The latter produces fruit only at the end of "years of hard work, much sweat and much impatient waiting." And after all may come a killing frost.

Professor Newton, of Yale College, computes that 450,000,000 meteors fall on the surface of the earth each hour. Professor Alex Herschel has shown that the average weight of a meteor may be taken as five grams, whence it follows that the earth receives hourly not less than 2,250 kilograms, or 4,950 pounds of foreign material deposited upon it from the celestial spaces.

Every army has its particularly inhumane method of payment. In France, Italy and the men are paid every five days. In Germany they are paid ten days. In Spain—oddly—and in Turkey, too, all French conscripts are paid every 15 days. In the Balkans, however, they are paid every 30 days. Out of his monthly pay of 31.2 francs, a French conscript has to give his sergeant about 30 francs, he is a slave unto him for his keep. The poor guy has no clothing, equipment and pocket money—should anything be left.

The marriage of George Finlay, the historian of ancient Greece and for many years correspondent of the London Times at Athens, was attended at considerable romance. Finlay had been once attached to a beautiful Armenian girl at Constantinople, and as her family would never have consented to her marriage with the young Scotchman, determined to elope with her. A Scotch or an English friend was to take her to the Great Britain, but she arranged that the young lady was to be got on board in a box prepared for the purpose. When the eventful moment came the girl became frightened and refused to allow herself to be placed in the box. Her sister, a girl equally lovely, thought it a pity that the romantic arrangement should not be taken advantage of, and entered herself in the box in place of her sister, supposing Finlay must have been considerably surprised when the box was opened in the cabin of the yacht and not his sweetheart, but her sister, was revealed, dressed in midshipman's uniform. The brother of the young lady had discovered the affair and was quickly on board the yacht to demand an explanation. Finlay saw only one course before him. The girl had been compromised; he would marry her. The brother giving his consent, the marriage took place at once.—San Francisco Alta.

For some time prior to 1874 Herman Horman had a boot and shoe store in Chicago, and he was one of the many who subsisted on the business of peddling that period. His fallowing was for about $75,000, and his creditors, nearly all of whom lived in the city, readily agreed to a proposed compromise of fifty cents on the dollar. The composition was ratified by the courts. He assented to the conditions, but never, they say, they told him that the last cent if it should ever be in his power. Similar promises seem to be customary in such cases, so that, although Mr. Horman had a reputation for strict integrity, no creditor had any doubt that the compromise was completed. After the compromise was completed Mr. Horman moved into a small store, was almost penniless, but his reputation was sufficient to procure him a new stock of goods on credit. He worked hard, and was largely helped by his sons and sons-in-law. His business progressed satisfactorily, and every year he was able to sell with which many of the old bankrupts were settling their debts to his creditors in the past. After nearly eleven years' waiting the time at last arrived when he was in position to liquidate the old claim, and a few weeks ago he started east, for the purpose of hunting up the old creditors and paying them off. During these eleven years many changes have taken place. Some creditors had died, and their widows or heirs had to be discovered. Some had dissolved partnership with former partners, and the outgoing partners or their heirs to go to ground and avoid their proper share. Fortunately, Mr. Herman was not enthusiastically received, but he nevertheless went, and he had plenty of volunteers to assist him in the work of locating his creditors. The last of the money about $39,000 in all, was paid long than a week ago. Most of the creditors express the utmost surprise, and accept the money as a present, and only say that it came at a time when their circumstances made it badly wanted. One creditor had died and left a widow and family in a rather destitute condition, and the unexpected check seemed to them a heaven-sent legacy.

Thomas M. Field has written on from memory a description of a colorful wedding under the old regime, which he said, used to be related with gusto by Major Herman Bowman. A tall dignified and clerical-dressed-looking negro (Tom Menzies), officiating, said in pompous tones:

Glass drinking cups, having round bottoms, have recently been found in Anglo-Saxon graves. Such cups could not be made to stand upright, and it has been supposed they were designed to cause the drinker to empty them at once. This feature is said to have given rise to the word tumbler, which has been applied to our drinking vessels, though these do not possess the curious shape of the ancient cups.—Temperance Banner.

How to Run a Town.
Either run a town with a law and just tell out and leave it. One of the two things must be done—run the town for all its worth, get up steam and keep it up—or quit the whole thing, slide out and let nature take its course. Do you want to run a town? Do you want business to come to town? Encourage those who do come. Do you want a prosperous town, where people can come who are disposed to make homes? Two boys from right will split work to more for a few individuals, but work together for common prosperity and mutual benefit. Wake up, rub your eyes, roll up your sleeves and go to work. Don't work with fear and trembling, but take it for granted that blood will tell. Leave results to themselves, borrow no trouble, but all unite to make it the biggest kind of a city.

Never Give Up.
If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the blood improved, that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease; and henceforth you will rejoice in the price of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by All Druggists.

The following letter received by Mr. Jas. Crawford will be of interest to our readers. Mr. Pawcut is, in the grain business and has good opportunities for observing the condition of the crops.

Halleck, Mo., Aug. 17 1885.
James Crawford Esq.
Dear Sir: From my observation on an extended trip through the spring wheat section I am forced to the conclusion that the crop will be very much below the average, your section being much better than the average. I believe later in the season we will have better prices. The decline just now is owing to the weight of the large stacks of old wheat piled up in large quantities and getting too forcing their removal, which in the end will be all the better for the farmer that can hold his wheat until next season. We are glad to hear from you, when you commence threshing, as to actual yields and quality.

Yours, Very Respectfully,
R. H. Pawcut.

THE BEST BLOOD
Purifier

purifier, it is very much superior to any other preparation of Sarsaparilla. All persons of scrofulous or consumptive tendencies, and especially delicate children, are sure to be greatly benefited by its use. J. W. Starr, Leavenworth, Iowa, writes:

"For years I was troubled with Scrofulous complaints. I tried several different preparations, which did me little, if any good. Two bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla effected a complete cure. It is my opinion that this medicine is the best blood at the day." C. E. Dyer, Kansas, N. H. writes:—For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eye, and unable to obtain relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I have taken several bottles, am greatly benefited, and believe it to be the best of blood purifiers." H. Harris, Cleveland City, Ramsey Co., Dakota, writes: "I have been an intense sufferer, with Dyspepsia, for the past three years. Six months ago I began to use

AYER'S Sarsaparilla
It has effected an entire cure, and I am now as well as ever."
