

Farmers Of County May Earn $112,000

Corn Resealing Program Includes 600,000 Bushels

The corn resealing program of farmers of Wayne county offers an opportunity to earn approximately $112,000 by keeping 1938 and 1939 corn stored on their farms...

Mr. Bard pointed out that Wayne county farmers have 600,000 bushels of corn under seal on which they obtained AAA loans in 1938 and 1939.

If this corn is resealed on the farms for two years, the owners can earn a storage payment of 10 cents per bushel, which is paid in advance.

More Cribs, Bins

Much of the money earned for storage will probably go for additional cribs and bins, but there are no restrictions on its use.

Corn growers may renew their loans for either one or two years. If corn is resealed for one year, the storage payment is five cents per bushel.

Mr. Bard explained that storage of Ever-Normal Granary corn on the farm is by far the most efficient and practical way of handling it, for both the farmer and AAA.

Benefits Listed

"Not only are storage costs less than in commercial storage, but increased security is given farmers and the nation as a whole by keeping corn on farms where it may be used for livestock feed or marketed at times most favorable to the producer," he declared.

Mrs. Larson Hurt In Car, Truck Crash

Carroll Woman Suffers Serious Injuries In Accident

A collision between an egg truck, driven for the Midwest Poultry company of South Sioux City by A. J. Bowers, and an automobile driven by L. C. Larson of Carroll, Saturday evening about 10 o'clock 5 miles southeast of Carroll, caused serious injuries to Mrs. Larson and wrecked both the automobile and the truck.

Mrs. Larson, 72, was brought to a Wayne hospital by Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Goodsell and Herman Goodsell of Belden who were first on the scene of the accident. Mrs. Larson's left leg was broken, and a deep gash in her knee required 20 stitches to close.

Mr. Larson, whose birthday was Monday, is 70 years of age. He received only slight bruises in the accident.

The Larson's were on their way home from the Herman Freese home near Carroll Saturday night when the accident occurred. They believe they must have been blinded by the lights from the truck but are not sure exactly what happened.

The truck's driving shaft was broken and the dual wheels torn off. The driver received only slight injuries.

Crowd Will See Opening Grid Battle

Wildcats And Southern Normal Mix Here Friday

A record crowd is expected to witness the opening football game of the season for Coach Jim Morrison's Wildcats Friday night when they clash at the college athletic field with Southern Normal of Springfield, So. Dak.

With the athletic committee of the Chamber of Commerce and local merchants sponsoring the initial grid battle, tickets to the game were being distributed this week by the hundreds. Virtually all local business firms purchase tickets which they are distributing to their friends and customers.

Outlook Bright

The Wildcats will open the season with many veterans and more candidates for positions on the team than in any previous recent year. Coach Morrison will also be able to pack considerable weight into a strong line, which will average around 175 to 185 pounds to the player, depending on those used.

The tentative starting lineup, announced by Coach Morrison Saturday includes five newcomers to the Wildcats and the remainder are veterans from last year's squad.

The starting lineup includes the following in the line and the weight of each: Nitz, 172; Brosch, 191; Childs, 185; Webb, 160; Corvill, 170; Westphal, 190; Lindahl, 180. In the back, he expects to start Best, 155; Retzlaff, 155; Morgan, 150, and Kelley, 172. It will be seen from the above figures that the backs are light, but the coach also has some heavier backs that will probably be used a little later in the game.

Indirect action on this problem may come through the joint Canadian-American Defense Board meetings, about the last of which Mayor LaGuardia, chairman of the American section of the board, said: "The plan covers the very best contributions each country can make to the common defense". Cherry Writing Second Book Of Instruction Now

Raymond Cherry, who is in charge of the industrial arts department at Wayne State Teachers college, is completing a book on "Modern Plastics". His new book, like the one which he published several months ago on "General Leathercraft", will include numerous illustrations and designs. Methods of operations are described in detail and sections are devoted to related material and designs. The book answers a need for a volume which combines all of these features and has been prepared so that it may be used in the home and in small schools as well as in colleges.

Majority of the pictures used to illustrate the various steps and processes in both books were taken in Professor Cherry's department at the college. Some have been furnished by material supply houses.

Many letters commending the first book have been received by Professor Cherry and his second book should be even more popular as the use of plastics is being greatly increased in a wide variety of fields.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Higard of Gem, Kans., visited from Saturday to Monday in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Armand Hiscox. Mrs. Hiscox and Mrs. Higard are sisters.

Wayne On Parade

Wayne's baseball season came to a most satisfactory close Sunday when the local nine walked away with the championship of the Big Six league by defeating Randolph, 4 to 2. Fans have enjoyed some excellent baseball this season and even greater interest in baseball should result next year. Plan now to see the opening football clash of the season Friday.

Some of the learned professors of WSTC, who lean heavily toward the GOP side of the current political battle royal — strange as that may seem in view of their many degrees — generously admitted Monday that The News devotes as much space to the republicans as to the democrats but charge that we seem to have considerable difficulty finding anything good to say about the minority party. Perhaps they have something there but we've spent many weary hours in vain search through republican publications which circulate in this section of the country trying to find kind words for the democrats, unless of course the latter happens to be among the few who have taken frequent walks into GOP pastures. However to refute their charges we hereby declare that the republican party is the finest on earth with the lone exception of the democratic party.

About 25 musicians reported for the first Municipal band rehearsal under the new city and school band director, K. D. Hanson, which was held Monday night at the City Auditorium. A Second Convention

First, it was Thomas Dewey, the fighting prosecuting attorney who was paraded before the public as the perfect candidate, the hope of the republican party to unseat President Roosevelt. Mr. Dewey's popularity soared by leaps and bounds and it appeared for several weeks as if he was assured of the republican nomination.

It was then that Mr. Dewey talked when Mr. Dewey should have been listening. It was then that he revealed to a large percentage of the voters that he was far too inexperienced to cope with the grave national and international problems facing this country. His decline in popularity was even swifter than his climb to the peak had been; so far, in fact, did he fall that even the old guard of his party realized it would be an impossible task to sell him to the voters. So it was that despite the fact that he went into the national party convention with far more pledged delegates than other candidates, he lost support steadily after the first ballot.

Frantic for a champion, one who would at least give them a faint battling chance of upsetting such a popular president as Franklin Delano Roosevelt and apparently being unable to find one in their own ranks, they turned desperately to a road, prepared to appear most inviting by Big Business and the giant private utility interests, which were greatly irked at the government's excursions into the field of cheap power.

Wendell Willkie became the man of the hour, the perfect candidate with no past political record to mar his acceptance to a group thus left in the midst of a convention and without a candidate on whom they could place their support with any hope of carrying more than the two states which former governor Landon of Kansas captured four years ago. The fact that he had so recently been a democrat was a bit hard to swallow. You could sense it in the reluctance with which they shifted their ballots from old time republicans to this new hope. That he accepted much of the liberal policies of the New Deal was also a thorn in the side of the more conservative element of the GOP, but, after all, the republican party must have a candidate, so to Mr. Willkie enough turned to assure his nomination.

He was paraded before the public in the most favorable light possible as the perfect candidate, chosen by spontaneous demand of the voters. His stock soared even after the convention at Philadelphia had adjourned and it appeared for a time that he would be a strong contender.

Then, Mr. Willkie talked. Naturally he had to say something when he was formally notified of his nomination and since that time there have been numerous difficult questions and issues arising on which he, as a candidate for the presidency, was forced to take some sort of a stand. In the excitement of the convention, it was apparently forgotten that he lacked experience in both domestic and international problems, that his past business career did not equip him even as well as it had Mr. Dewey for the high office to which he aspires.

When he talked, he lost rather than gained votes. It is generally agreed that he reached the peak of his popularity before his acceptance address, which was a serious disappointment to many. Since then, he has been approving with minor reservations first one and then another major step taken by President Roosevelt. President Roosevelt urged conservation; Mr. Willkie approved with modifications. President Roosevelt risked his political future again in making the sensational trade with Britain when it became obvious that to await action from congress would ruin the effectiveness of any such action on the rocks of delay and indecision. Mr. Willkie approved the deal but favored letting congress toy with the matter while Britain was being crushed by Hitler's war machine. As issues arise, President Roosevelt has met them with action while Mr. Willkie has been finding it expedient to join him on the same side of the fence while still disargueing on minor details.

His stand on questions has been disappointing to hundreds of thousands of his followers. Republicans are beginning to realize that a Willkie victory would mean turning over the country to a leader who fits far better into the mold of a follower, one who would do virtually what Mr. Roosevelt is doing if so advised and would be seriously handicapped by inexperience. That's why Mr. Willkie's popularity is following the same path of decline that Mr. Dewey trod several months ago.

It has been suggested by those who believe that the third time is the charm and that the old adage that if at first you fail, you should try, try again, that the republicans try their hand at upsetting precedents and hold a second national convention to select another candidate for the presidency, perhaps two of them. The booms for both Mr. Dewey and Mr. Willkie enjoyed to brief a life to benefit the party; perhaps if a new champion could be found and a boom launched for him now it could be nursed through election day. It isn't such a bad idea.

Republican convention leaders and the well organized group which sponsored Mr. Willkie's candidacy are more to blame for Mr. Willkie's errors and the decline of his political popularity than is the candidate. They selected him knowing well his lack of experience in serving his country in any capacity other than as the head of a private utility concern. Surely, they should have realized that grave problems confront the nation and that their candidate could not sit high and dry upon the fence ignoring them completely until after the votes were counted. The rise and fall of Mr. Dewey should have been ample warning. Apparently it wasn't and so they are now giving the country a repeat performance, which never makes a very good show.

Autumn Arrives

Next Monday, autumn will officially arrive and this year it should be welcomed with more enthusiasm than for many years past in this section of the state. Autumn is the season of harvest and this year's crops compare most favorably with those of recent years. However, before summer departs, she deserves a good round of applause from the residents of northeastern Nebraska.

For the most part, it has been a most pleasant summer. The torrid days were few and the heat waves were not of unusual intensity. Best of all, summer delivered her full share of moisture, so necessary to a successful fall here.

Autumn has much to offer in Nebraska; in fact, many term it their favorite season. The season of harvest, it serves as a stimulant to business. To the sports fan, it brings the climax of the baseball season, the world series, and the beginning of the football season and winter sports. To the politician, this year it will bring a great national campaign which will reach its climax in November as well as state and county races. A new term of school is just getting underway, which will continue throughout this season, winter and spring. To America we may hope that this season brings continuation of peace but Europe faces only the dismal future of continued war and suffering.

The Nation's Leading Letter by J. E. Jones, Washington, D. C.

WE'RE GETTING TOUGH

Washington, D. C., September 16 — The congressional opposition to military and defense measures has been weakening during the past few weeks. This change in conditions was shown in the way legislative support rallied to the conscription legislation. The legislators on Capitol Hill assure us that the pressure from the country at large put the selective draft across.

This seemed a little hard to believe until a few days ago, when President Roosevelt traded 50 destroyers, valued at 85 million dollars, for air and naval bases, in eight British possessions. Washington almost lost its breath when the announcement was made that the deal was all finished. But as congress began to recover from the shock there arose among the statesmen, and in the press the emphatic voice of overwhelming approval. Even Mr. Willkie declared that "the country will undoubtedly approve" of the trade, but he added that it was regrettable that President Roosevelt "did not deem it necessary" to obtain prior congressional approval or permit public discussion. We certainly are getting tough!

Broad Outlooks

Railroad building in America reached its peak about 1870. The pioneers in that first important marvel of transportation went farther out on the limb than the builders of today who are investing their own and public monies in meeting the needs for modern highways and super-highways. Competent traffic experts have made estimates showing that the great cities of our country and the smaller towns could afford to meet the challenge for enlarged and improved highways that would solve all major traffic problems and snarls that now exist.

"I have talked with experts in many of the great cities of the United States," said Senator Downey in a recent address in the senate, "and while they differ materially as to what they believe to be the average speed of vehicular traffic in the United States, they are all pretty well agreed that modern efficient highways would double the average vehicular speed." Estimates that he secured from competent authorities placed the present average automobile speed at about 20 miles an hour, while a complete system of super-highways would double the average speed to 40 miles an hour.

The great super-highway about to be opened from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg has been described by traffic experts as a forward step in highways. It is expected to prove that trucks and automobiles can be driven over it, pay the tolls, and reduce their cost of travel.

Modern highways like the Pittsburgh-Harrisburg project are expected to do away with practically all collisions, and in support of the engineers are unanimous in the belief that accidents are reduced and collisions rarely ever occur on super-highways.

"Engineers in California took some of the most dangerous places in our highway systems, watched them for two or four years, and then proceeded to build super-highways, and the accidents almost passed out of the picture," declared Senator Downey.

In answer to an inquiry by Senator Byrd of Virginia regarding the cost of building the highways and super-highways, Senator Downey said that the money returned from modern and super-highways would be recovered to the taxpayers through the use of the nation's idle man power in building "self-liquidating projects" that would increase the efficiency of our nation's economy to such a great extent as to offset the cost of these particular investments.

The National Capital has been told that the entire highway systems of the country could be brought up to the above standards in 10 years.

New War Millionaires

News out of Washington takes up a lot of space with the pros and cons about excess-profit taxes and war millionaires.

The questions are big. The short answer is found in existing income tax laws that take most of the "unjust enrichment" away from millionaires, no matter in what way they are paying their riches. Mae West was asked one time what she did with 400 thousand dollars that she earned in a year and she replied: "I sent most of it to the government at Washington". That's what these new war millionaires will do, regardless of whether there are any new laws passed or not.

"Prepared To Serve America"

It can be safely assumed that all of us are "Prepared to Serve America". The adoption of that phrase as their Class Day theme by the graduating classes of General Motors Institute is significant not because it indicates willingness but because in this instance it can be taken to mean capability. The 306 members of this year's graduating classes have been trained by factory and faculty for key positions. They are ready and able to form a framework upon which the corporation can build in expanding its personnel for defense needs.

The work of the Institute, located at Flint, Michigan, represents probably the largest, most comprehensive training program ever organized to meet the needs of a specific industry. Since 1919 Albert Sobey, its director, has trained more than 75,000 workers. Key activity is a co-operative program by means of which General Motors plants prepare promising young men for future supervisory posts. More than 200 courses are offered to workers who wish to learn a new trade or advance in their own field by spare-time study.

Key plant workers are brought in for short, intensive, full-time training in new techniques and the use of new tools. Extension training groups are organized in the plants to keep plant executives and foremen abreast of new developments and to enable them to advance into positions of greater responsibility. Apprentice programs in the plants are served by the Institute in an advisory capacity.

This flexible training program, which stems from the Institute and reaches down into the shops in each of its plant cities, puts the corporation in a very favorable position for providing manpower for defense production, its officials feel. Like the students at the Institute, the corporation is "preparing to serve America" in both senses of the phrase.

At this time, when predictions of a skilled worker "bottleneck" are so prevalent, it is encouraging to hear Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman of General Motors, say:

"Because of our long-range training program, built up over the past 21 years and designed to meet any need that might arise, we have a goodly supply of trained personnel and also the facilities to expand as circumstances require."

Extreme Conditions

Some of our foremost national rulers believe that Great Britain is rocking on the edge of defeat. This has influenced congress to back the administration in "every step short of war", to help England.

The surprising deal by which President Roosevelt traded 50 destroyers that have been overhauled and modernized and put in the pink of condition, even though they are called "over-age" has been seriously challenged. When the government parts with 85 million dollars worth of ships it is not a matter that is to be sneezed at. England got more than its money's worth in the trade for a few patches of its soil to be used by the United States in its future programs of defending the Western Hemisphere.

Making Machines For Defense

An official memorandum to editors issued by the National Defense Advisory commission a few days ago prefaced its statement as follows:

"The American citizen, suddenly becoming defense minded, is able to jump one of two ways". One viewpoint is that billions of dollars voted by congress do not produce planes, fast enough to darken the skies or fill the highways with new armored divisions. On the other hand the national defense program is a tremendous undertaking and it will take a long time to carry it through. Planes can't be built in a jiffy.

Within eight weeks after the formation of the National Defense Advisory commission, Commissioner Knudsen stated that "we can be confident of a production machine capable of attaining the definite goal. This can be accomplished just as fast as the best production facilities and techniques in the world can gain momentum".

The government statement covers the question of contractors, tools, machines, speed, bottle necks, plants, tanks, trucks, ships and aircraft.

Machine tools are listed as number one in the National Defense statement which observes that plants are quickly built, but: "A plant is about as useful as handles on a pyramid if there are no facilities to get the raw materials to the plant." * * When it comes to equipment, automobile factories will need the new machine tools anyway because the machine tools they have, by and large, are set up to handle automobile size units, and automobiles turn out 100 horse-power while airplane plants turn out 1000 horse-power * * This whole business can go ahead in orderly progression, and as the plants are finished, the planes, the tanks, and the guns will roll down the production line on their way to the fighting forces".

M. M. Gilman, president of the Packard company, tells us that "there is about as much difference between making an automobile engine and making an aircraft engine as there is between making a hat and a pair of shoes". President Paul G. Hoffmann of the Studebaker corporation declares, "there is no thought of fat profit out of arms. It is absurd to talk of converting automobile production into arms production if by this is meant a cutting down of the production of passenger cars and trucks".

The National Defense Advisory commission is satisfying administrative and congressional heads of the government with its progress. An official statement just out of the government printing office says "the commission's coordinating activities is really a job of keeping things running smoothly, of speeding up here, slowing down a little there, looking ahead, meeting problems before they arise".

Tooling up will take all the fall of 1940. But the government report says that by the beginning of next year, materials should begin to roll into the arsenals and that by the Spring of 1941, production will be rising rapidly.

worth of clothing had been taken from a store at that place, and that a large touring car with three men, supposed to be the thieves, had started south from the scene of the robbery.

Wayne Nine Wins Big Six Title

game and made one of the local team's scores.

Crowd Attends

The championship battle, which was attended by a large crowd which filled the grandstand, was an exciting game throughout. Wayne scored its first two runs in the last of the fourth frame when the local team bunched three hits. The visitors were held scoreless until the first of the lucky seventh when they knotted the count with two scores. But the seventh also proved lucky for Wayne and the local team scored a pair of runs to regain its two-run margin. That ended the scoring for the game, the only other Randolph threat coming in the first of the ninth when the first batter walked and later advanced to second.

Wayne's team not only won the playoff series, but also led the league in the regular season and defeated Winside's nine, which closed the season in second place, in two straight games. Randolph and Laurel were the third and fourth place winners with Randolph winning the first playoff series and evening the victory count in the final playoff by defeating Wayne a week ago.

Interest in baseball has mounted throughout the season as the teams in the league were well matched and local fans had an opportunity to enjoy a good brand of baseball here for the first time in several years. Pete Petersen managed the local nine and the athletic committee of the Chamber of Commerce supported the team.

Kiwanians Discuss Work of Planning Board

The State Planning board came in for its share of discussion by the Wayne Kiwanians Monday noon, following Supt. N. F. Thorpe's description of its objectives and recommendations.

According to Superintendent Thorpe, the State Planning board was organized with the intent of surveying state institutions, colleges, insane asylums, penitentiaries and so on with the idea of bringing in recommendations for a building program. The original board came to the conclusion that they would have to know what type of educational program the buildings were to house and so the study evolved into eight separate studies in regards to education and each study group was broken into several smaller groups.

Recommendations

Several of the recommendations made last summer by the board are: That six year high schools be established in a number of larger towns throughout the state. That a number of high schools in smaller towns be reduced to two year high schools and state financial aid given to these schools in order to transport pupils to four year high schools.

That the University of Nebraska be designated as the school for training of four year high school teachers, and teacher colleges throughout the state be allowed to give only two years of college training, with the exception of one state teachers college which would still continue to give four years training.

The discussion which followed Superintendent Thorpe's explanation became so interesting that the Kiwanians decided the topic was worthy of more consideration of its various phases and voted to continue the discussion at future meetings.

Fall Weed Control

Russian thistles, foxtail and other annual weeds have made a vigorous growth on untilled stubble fields in Wayne county.

One of the best methods to control such weed growth at present is to use a subkiller, or an implement with large duckfoot shovels.

It may be necessary to use rolling coulters to prevent clogging of such machines where the weed growth is already large. Such machines cut the weeds below the surface and leave them on top of the ground to conserve water and control soil blowing.

The next best choice would be to use a disk to kill the weeds and keep them on the surface as much as possible. In a few cases, weeds are so large it may be advisable to mow them and leave them as a mulch on the surface. Although such weeds have already sapped a great deal of moisture from the soil, this may be a means of controlling excessive growth of thistles which may be troublesome in tilling the fields next spring.

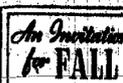

Russian thistles particularly make such a brushy growth. It often makes it necessary to burn them off in the spring, but such burning speeds up wind and water erosion by removing fiber and humus from the soil. Weeds permitted to mature also infest the ground with seed. Prompt control of the weeds now can do much to make farming easier next year.
