OVER THE STATE.

Fairbury's Flight.—Saturday evening Mr. William Percival, from England, and Rev. O. C. Tanner, of Owentown, Minn., arrived in this city. These gentlemen are the parents respectively of Mr. and Mrs. Percival, victims of the Nance county horror, and are now on their return from the reinterment at Owentown of the remains of their children and the other unfortunates of this terrible crime.

Through Messrs. Percival and Tanner several items not yet made public, concerning the pursuit of Percival were learned. These gentlemen say that the search for the murderer has been obtained. They say the one obtained on Saturday night by sending a telegram to Tecumseh, Canada, whereby it was learned that a man answering the description enrolled in one particular city in that of Percival had left that city on a train which happened to be connecting on account of the wrong one and at once started in pursuit. They say that they expect from the latter shortly after arrival that they were within a few hours of the right man. The latter will at the latest be in this city by Tuesday next. From this slight evidence of a man answering the description of the murderer, Detective Love from this city was sent to Canada on the same train with the men, in the hope that he might be able to identify him as soon as he arrives there, but as none of him was known to the officers there, it is supposed now that the clue proved a false one. Detective Love has however, left his surrounding on account of the expense and will return to this city. It is supposed from the fact that shortly after arrival at Tecumseh the men who were in pursuit of Percival left at the latter's request for a point in the United States, that this point is in this city

Riel, the rebel leader in the Northwest territory, has been captured by the Canadian forces.

The eyebrow has begun its deadly work. One in western Kansas Saturday evening killed several people and injured fifty more.

John A. Logan was re-elected United States senator Tuesday by the Illinois legislature, all the Republicans, 103, voting for him.

One of the most prominent features of the associated press dispatches every day at present is that which announces that "The President has appointed ——vice ——— unpatched."

The English are preparing for a great naval review off the coast of Ireland, and the Russians are assembling their military forces for artillery practice and review.

At a country church near Madison, Florida last Sunday a family feud of longstanding was settled by three brothers in each family engaging in a bloody fight in which five of the six combatants were killed or mortally wounded.

The "Topics" man of the Lincoln Journal recently attended a concert at which he heard a great deal of what is called classical music. Topics didn't mind the calls for music with melody in it. The musically uneducated editor of the Omaha Republican thereupon shies some chunks of musical sarcasm at the Topics, and in effect says he is only fit to listen to the beating of a tom-tom. Just the same the eyes of the whole tribe of the people will be with Topics.

HIS WEDDING TRIP.

The True vicissitudes of an Anecdote Illustrated by a Freight Example.

There is a story about a wedding trip that has been knocking about the country for some time. We have tried to keep it out of the "Drawer," but it is of no use to kick against it any longer. It was first told to the "Drawer" editor in October, 1863, by a clergyman of strict temperance principles and high character—in fact, a total abstainer—who had it from a friend of his, first-hand, who had just returned from the west. The friend, he told you, saw and heard what he related, and he was a person of undoubted veracity, though perhaps at no situation, when travelling, not so total as the clergyman. It was in brief, to this effect. In the car on a train from Toledo to Chicago was a man who was alone, looking absently out of the window and appearing dejected. During the stoppage at Goshen happened to a newsboy and the generous passengers purchased all the papers of the boy. The solitary man alone of all the car felt refused to contribute anything, and even a quarter. Evidently somewhat sadly upon his singleness, when he turned round and said: "Gentlemen, it may appear strange to you that I give nothing; but I haven't a cent of money. Both I, and my wife and our portmanteau, and I am on my wedding trip, and I hadn't money enough to bring my wife along."

In December full wing the editor of the "Drawer" was one day with two other gentlemen in a library in New York. One of them said: "I have a good story the other day from a friend of mine who has just returned from Europe. Going down the Hudson River Pacific last summer he noticed on the steamboat a melancholy-looking man, who did not appear to care much for the scenery, but leaned over the guards and constantly regarded the water. Following into conversation with him he ascertained that the man was a Frenchman, fishmarking that the journey did not seem to interest him, the Prussian said: 'No, I am rather unseasy. The truth is I'm on my wedding tour, and I would not have left my wife.'"

The editor of the "Drawer" said that it was a good story, at least he began to think it was true, as it was confirmed by so many independent witnesses. Anyway, he took from his pocket a letter which he had received that morning by mail. In it the writer, a gentleman of culture and travel, said that a serious incident happened on his tour last summer. He and his wife were on a Rhine steamer, when they noticed on other passenger whom all the beauties of the scenery failed to rouse from his dejection. She, with an object in cheering them all the morning, and at length succeeded in interesting him, she frankly added that she proposed to go and speak to the melancholy stranger and find out the cause of his sadness. The husband said that would be a foolish thing to do, and she might get into trouble. But the wife insisted (for though American women have little authority, they have wonderful power) and over to where the stranger stood, and accosted him, and they engaged in conversation. In a few moments the lady returned, laughing. "It is all right," she said, gayly. "We ... man is on his wedding trip and couldn't afford to bring his wife!"

The editor then relished the original true story as it was told him by the T. A. delegate. He had prepared, on an impeachable testimony, that the same incident occurred on the river Tiber, in the presence of three persons the same year—one Italian, one on the Rhine, the other on the Jordan. Well, he had begun to say one of those voracious people who will not be kept back this question, the third member of the party, who had been silent and had not interfered with the story in any way, exhi: "I can tell you the real original of the story. Seven years ago, when I was well known wholesale house in this city, an old bachelor book-keeper, who had been many years with the firm, suddenly announced that he was to be married. The partners gave him a week's holiday, and his fellow-clerks raised a little purse and presented it to the happy bridegroom. A couple of days afterward one of the clerks received a letter from a town on Newport, and there, laughing, about the Ocean house, and apparently enjoying himself immensely, he saw the recently-married old book-keeper—but alone. 'Where's your wife?' She's at home.' But I thought you had married given you for a wedding trip?' 'So I did,' was the reply, 'but I found it was intended to include her.'"

Now we are not saying that this is an unwise way of taking what is really one of the most perilous journeys in life—the matrimonial journey. But what could have induced all these different respectable witnesses to appropriate this particular incident to their own purposes is observation? It sometimes seems as if people are not what they should be.—Harper's Magazine.

Rob Bandester's Ideal Old Man.

Man never attains his ideal. He comes nearest it the day he leaves school; all that year he hovers around it in pleasure proximity. Sometimes I think he quite attains it on commencement day. But a year away from school, he and his ideal part company. He sees it drifting farther away from his eager hands. I have, in my own brilliant and aggressive career, pursued several dazzling and more or less perfect ideals. I remember one night, at the distance pole, I can see a profile of my wandering under the moon, and I feel that I am most sad. Alas, I can see, is a coarse sight, and I am very loth to see it get entirely away from me.

I have my ideal of physical perfection in the aged. I am not a tall man now. I do not really have to stand up to look over the back of a car seat. I stand up merely because I can see farther. But as I grow old I want to fat up. I want to develop a capacious bay window, so that when my summer coat is hanging on the wall it will look like a schooner coming down wing and wing." Then I can wear my watch in a fob, with a great big seal dangling from it like a bell clapper. I want to be short in the limbs and wheeze when I climb stairs, and puff and pant when I walk up hill, and have to take two steps to cross the gutter. And I would wear a clawhammer coat, with side lapels, all the time, and carry my handkerchief in my hat. I would like my hair to range snow white or else fall off. I am not particular which. Then I would like my mustache to bleach out until it looked like a stench of frost across my lip. I believe that is all. I think that is a photograph of the kind of an old man I would like to be. This is my ideal old man. Came as I whoop laugh, of course.

And I am just as confident as I am that I will die rich that, as I grow old, I will shrivel up and dry out until I look like a shoestring with clothes on.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Ma—"Why, that Noah was in." Pa—"And he didn't mention our flood to all?" Ma—"Oh, no." Pa—"Well, that's queer. Where did the minister come from, anyhow?" Ma—"He is from Philadelphia." Pa—"That's the way with those Philadelphians. They don't see anything big outside of their own city. I suppose his friend Noah is a Philadelphia man, too. Confound 'em!"

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well."

Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25 cents per box, by all druggists.

All the defaulting cashiers' bookkeepers, treasurers, confidential clerks, &c., seem to be splendid fellows, generous, unselfish, good men, devoted to their families and friends. All they lack is honesty. If they had just enough honesty to salt down and save their good qualities they would be invaluable to their employers and to society. After awhile, probably, it will occur to somebody that honesty is more desirable in a man who has the handling of the cash than any other quality or accomplishment that he can display. Then a new brood of "confidential" employes will be introduced who may not be quite so showy fellows as their predecessors, and who will be found after the proprietor finds that he would like to take a look at the books.
